ON THURSDAY, the people of New York State killed Ruth Snyder.

"She began to whimper, as the uniformed guards closed in on her. The sound was like the frightened whine of a little puppy." Two reporters in the death room heard her say, clutching the crucifix, handed to her by Father John McCaffrey, "Father, forgive them, for they don't know what they do."

WHEN the guards stepped back, the woman had been strapped into the chair, one strap on her chin, one around her bosom, others on her arms, wrists, legs. On her head was a leather headgear such as football players wear, inside the wet electrode, pressing against the scalp shaved bare. The electrician threw the switch, the body straightened up, the head pressing backward, violently. Thin smoke, curling in a spiral above the death mask, showed that the current was doing its work.

THREE minutes later the straps were unfastened and the work was done.

Ten minutes later Judd Gray, who helped to kill her husband, died in the same way and "the majesty of the law was vindicated."

NEWS of the judicial killings spread over the country, long before the distribution of newspapers. Three thousand miles from Sing Sing prison, at 1 o'clock this morning, a brakeman of the Southern Pacific, ordering "coffee and doughnuts" in a little restaurant opposite the station at San Luis Obispo said to his friend, who had ordered "coffee and wheatcakes," "She killed him in cold blood, hit him on the head with a sashweight while he was asleep, and got what she deserved."

That may be true. But the State of New York got more than it deserved, the shame and disgrace of killing a helpless woman, when imprisonment for life would have answered every purpose.

The other brakeman responded philosophically, pouring molasses on his cakes, "I wonder where the pair of them are now?"

JUDD GRAY, Ruth Snyder's partner in death, found his last comfort in the Twenty-third Psalm.

"He maketh me to lie down in green pastures," might have sounded strangely to one about to sit down in the electric chair.

But for all that die, no matter how they die, there is comfort in the fourth verse of that psalm.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me."

How many millions have found comfort in those words, when there was no other comfort?

THE government proposes to spend $129,000,000 every year, for 20 years, on battleships of different kinds, including fast, necessary cruisers. This means a total investment of $2,580,000,000 in new ships.

The country can afford it and such a program will impress other countries.

We could also afford flying machines to protect those fighting ships, which in modern war, without flying machine protection, would be as helpless as sheep among wolves, without shepherds or sheep dogs.

DEMOCRATS who get the backbone of their vote from the south, select for the first time in history a city of the solid south, Houston, for their party convention.

It would have been an education for Democrats to travel across the country to San Francisco. But now that it is over, perhaps the Houston choice was wise.

Prosperity has a dissolving power, that even a "solid south" might not permanently resist.

YESTERDAY, Friday the Thirteenth, probably added a little to the sum total of foolish superstition. The usual number of accidents and misfortunes occurred. Accumulated statistics could have predicted them with great accuracy in advance.

Superstition will attribute many of the accidents to "the unlucky day," which in reality was the same as every other day.

SUPERSTITIONS die slowly, because the human mind has an appetite for the marvelous and prefers superstitious explanations of natural events.

Shakespeare's Hotspur bragged of strange portents and happenings that marked his birth. He was annoyed by the truthful remark that the same things would have happened "if your mother's cat had kittened."

MITCHEL FIELD, N. Y., Jan. 14.—Undeterred by various misfortunes, Clarence D. Chamberlin and Roger O. Williams were still circling over Mitchel Field today in the Bellanca monoplane which they hope will carry them to a new world's duration record. They must stay up until 3:34 o'clock this afternoon to officially break the mark of 52 hours 22 minutes and 31 seconds, set by two German aviators.

Chamberlain at 8:30 o'clock dropped a note saying that a leak in one of the fuel tanks might force them down soon.

The note said, however, that the fliers might be able to stay up until the record was broken.

"Can't tell how gas consumption is," the note read, "because of

Ruth Ordeal Saps Warden

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—(AP.)—Warden Lewis E. Lawes of Sing Sing Prison was on his way to Palm Beach today for a 10-day rest, his nerves shattered by the ordeal of the executions of Mrs. Ruth Snyder and Henry Judd Gray Thursday night. He went on the advice of his physician, his secretary said. The warden has long been opposed to capital punishment.

His friends said he was also exercised because some one in the execution chamber took a photograph of Mrs. Snyder as she was in the electric chair. The photograph was prominently displayed in a pictorial newspaper.

It was said the camera was strapped to the leg of one of the witnesses and the bulb was pressed from a coat pocket.

The executioner, Robert Elliott, admitted he had called upon a physician yesterday, but denied that he was ill.

Mrs. Lillian Hickey, Sing Sing matron, to whom Ruth Snyder had almost daily poured out her innermost thoughts, longings and fears, was also reported in a state of collapse today. Mrs. Hickey was ill, overcome by the soul-harrowing scene in which she participated

Cold Wave Due Here Sunday

Winter again will hold sway, the weather man promised today, contrasting sharply with the spring-like temperatures of the last 10 days.

Snow and much colder weather is scheduled to arrive tomorrow on the heels of a slight rise in temperature tonight, accompanied by light rain. By Sunday night below freezing temperatures will prevail.

"Only a normal brand of winter weather, but seemingly severe because of the mild type we have been enjoying," said Forecaster W. S. Brotzman.

PRESIDENT SPEEDS TO MIAMI

By International News Service.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 14.—The presidential special reached Jacksonville at 7:45 o'clock this morning and departed for Miami after a brief stop.

A fair sized crowd was at the station to greet President and Mrs. Coolidge.

The President speeded southward today on what many of his advisers consider one of the most important undertakings of his presidency—the betterment of relations between the United States and Latin-America.

Irritated for years by the incessant bickering with Mexico, these relations lately have been brought to a stage bordering on acuteness by reason of the American military occupation of Nicaragua, an incident that has brought into the open the long repressed muttering throughout South and Central America against "the Colossus of the North."

At Havana on Monday a President of the United States for the first time in history will stand before the assembled statesmen of the Western Hemisphere and endeavor to explain to them the principles that underlie American policy in Latin-America and what Washington conceives to be the mission of Pan-Americanism in the new world. For a President of the United States to undertake such a task in Washington would be an event of far-reaching significance in the realm of world politics and statecraft; for him to attempt it on the foreign soil of a Latin-American capital is unprecedented in

Ruth's Fate Stuns Velma

By International News Service

PAINESVILLE, O., Jan. 14.—Pale, haggard and nervous from the strain she has undergone while confined in the county jail here for five weeks, Velma Van Woert West, under indictment for first degree murder, in connection with the slaying of Thomas Edward West, her husband, at Perry, O., December 6, today was causing authorities much concern about her condition.

"I will be happy if I can keep her strong until after the trial," Sheriff Edward Rasmussen remarked today.

Hearing about the Ruth Snyder and Judd Gray electrocution in New York state has caused the youthful widow to become moody and disconsolate, Rasmussen believes.

This woman, who was "the life" of a Cleveland bridge party the night of the murder, and who is alleged to have coolly confessed to the crime, has lost the poise she

Darlington Estate Split

Final partition of the Edith Darlington estate was ordered today when Judge James B. Drew, in Common Pleas Court, accepted the report of L. M. Shoemaker, master appointed in the suit of Samuel A. Ammon, husband of Mrs. Edith Darlington Ammon, against the University of Pittsburgh and other heirs under the will of Mrs. Ammon, who died three years ago.

The estate is valued at $434,000, and consists of the famous Guyasuta farm near Aspinwall and property in Shaler and O'Hara townships and the Twenty-third and Twenty-seventh Wards, Pittsburgh, which was handed down by Gen. James O'Hara, Revolutionary officer and Pittsburgh pioneer.

Ammon receives one-fourth of the estate, and chooses his equity in Guyasuta, which is appraised at $200,000. One-half of the estate goes to the University of Pittsburgh, while Lois Darlington Dowling, Barbara Lane Darlington and Edith Darlington Ghyssels, nieces of Mrs. Ammon, each receive one-twelfth.

Fred Meggary, 27, also is held in connection with the killing.

INTEREST IN MINERS' SHOW GROWING

Interest in the great midnight show at the Davis next Thursday by performers from a dozen theaters for the benefit of the destitute women and children in mining villages of Allegheny county, increased today as reports came in emphasizing the extent and acuteness of the suffering.

Philip Murray, international vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, stated that 9,200 families in mining villages of the Pittsburgh district have lost their homes during the past two months; 2,700 families are living in barracks, and 6,500 in other buildings, such as

Love Lorraine, Forgive Me—Ruth's Last Letter

By Universal Service

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Here is Ruth Snyder's last letter:

"My Dearest Brother: Margaret—Kitty & All:

"Time is fast passing by and while I have the inclination to write, I thought I'd tell you what is on my mind:—

"I don't want anything but the simplest of everything —only I ask that Father Murphy say a prayer for me before I am laid away.

"Mother will probably buy a plot—and have papa moved—if you intend, not to rest with us, then only two double graves will be necessary—I would like to have my baby with me, when the time comes—

"Could I ask you again, before I am called to either adopt Lorraine for me or else have mother adopt her—we cannot have her leave us after I am gone—won't you do this? Ask Hattie to love her for me, Margaret, too—

"Be kind to poor dear mother, try to take my place and help her—overlook her nervousness, if you can.—Watch her, too!—

"This is my last letter Andrew—bear up and help mother bear her heavy burden.—

"Goodbye, Andrew Dear, I am sorry for all the pain and trouble I have caused you all—Forgive me, please—Love,

Your sister,

"RUTH."

*Remember—Only the most simple burial, no mass, no inscriptions, very plain.—

"I want to go out of this world as I came into it—just a poor soul."

LORRAINE'S $97,000 HELD UP

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—The last chapters in the sordid drama that Ruth Snyder and Henry Judd Gray made with their illicit love, their murder of Alfred Snyder and finally their execution Thursday night, are being written.

These chapters deal with the comforts supplied for the innocent victims. The chief victims are Lorraine Snyder, orphaned by the murder of her father and the execution of her mother, and Jane Gray, 10-year-old daughter of the man who was executed.

Yesterday an insurance company paid the daughter of Gray $30,000 on a policy her father had held.

But the $97,000 insurance policy that Albert Snyder held is in litigation and there is a question whether Lorraine Snyder will receive this money. The insurance company contends the policy was obtained by fraud, that Mrs. Ruth Snyder took it out for her husband without his knowledge.

The civil suit over the policy was to have been tried today, but the tired attorneys who fought to save Mrs. Snyder from the gallows, pleaded that there be a continuance until Thursday. This plea was granted.

SPEEDING ON TO MIAMI

American history and is, as well, eloquent testimony to the importance which the administration attaches to the present state of our relations with the republics of the south.

Accompanying the President on his Cuban journey are the American delegates to the Pan-American Conference, which opens in Havana on Monday. Charles Evans Hughes was persuaded to emerge temporarily from private life to lead the delegation, the most distinguished that the United States government has ever sent to a similar conference in the nearly half century they have been held.

How important Latin America deems the impending visit of Mr. Coolidge is seen in the presence aboard the presidential special of three Mexican political writers for Mexico City newspapers. It is the first time in history that Mexican newspapers have ever "covered" the journey of an American President.

President Coolidge, Secretary of State Kellogg, who is also aboard, and Hughes have been in conference several times since leaving Washington over the American policy to be pursued at Havana.

It is the President's first visit to the far South and he has been as keenly interested in the scenery as any tourist on his first trip.

A stop of an hour will be made in Miami this evening. Late tonight the special will reach Key West. The party will spend the night again aboard the train and embark early Sunday morning on the battleship Texas for the seven-hour run across the Caribbean to the Cuban capital.

Chamberlin and Williams began their flight at 10:12 a. m. Thursday. Disregarding hardships caused by leaking gasoline and the spoiling of their food supply, the aviators courageously persisted in their attempt during their second night of continuous flying. In notes dropped from their plane they indicated that they were still cheerful and confident.

Their fog-flying instruments refused to function, the plane's heater was out of commission and leaking gasoline made their food unfit for consumption and filled the cabin of their ship with the fumes of poisonous ethyl gas. Their new plane was spattered black with flying oil.

At 11:12 a. m. today the aviators had been up 49 hours.

RESCUED FROM MINE

WALTER SMITH MICHAEL FRANK

Wandering into an abandoned mine at the foot of Laughlin avenue, Carrick, Walter Smith, 12, of 132 Laughlin avenue, Carrick; Michael Frank, 14, of 130 Laughlin avenue, and Edward Odes, 11, of 201 Linwood avenue, became lost when darkness fell and they could not see the opening of the pit. They failed to go home for dinner and their parents notified police, who went into the mine with flashlights and rescued the youngsters. Edward could not pose for the picture. His mother said he was not allowed out of the house—and that he was eating all meals standing.

POLICE CHASE ROBBERS

Police fired on three robbers who were fleeing from an Atlantic & Pacific chain store, at 320 North Aiken avenue, early today, but failed to find their target and were lost in the auto chase that followed.

Informed by neighbors that the store was being robbed the police arrived as the men were leaving in a stolen auto, believed taken from Charles J. Lynch, 7234 Verona boulevard, last night. A preliminary checkup indicates the loot consisted only of groceries.

churches, halls and the homes of friends. A number of families at Avella were served yesterday with notice to vacate. The condition of the mothers and little children in the makeshift shelters, deprived, as they are, of adequate clothing, furniture and food, is pitiful, and has aroused in the theatrical folk an earnest desire to help them.

John B. Reynolds, of the Theater Managers' Association of Pittsburgh, which is sponsoring the benefit entertainment, mentioned today that Francine Larrimore, star of "Chicago," the play at the Alvin, and Holbrook Blinn, star of "The Play's the Thing," the Pitt show, had both expressed regret that they would be unable to participate in the benefit because they will not be in Pittsburgh next week. They would welcome the opportunity, it was said, to help the cause by contributing their services to the entertainment.

The same spirit is being shown by all theatrical people in the city, and there is no doubt that those who are to take part in the show next week will give the best performance of their careers, because of their eagerness to make the benefit a big success in every way.

STARS ON PROGRAM

Headliners, best acts, stars, from the Alvin, Sheridan Square, Nixon, Pitt, Harris, Grand, Davis, Loew's Penn, Loew's Aldine, Gayety, Liberty and Schenley, will be seen. The performers will not take one cent for their services. The Managers' Association will bear the incidental expenses. Every dollar taken in will be devoted to relief work under the supervision of the theater managers. The money will be used to buy food, clothing and medicine, which will be distributed among the women and children needing them most in the mining villages of Allegheny county, regardless of whether the heads of the families are union or non-union workers.

Tickets for the benefit are now on sale at the Davis box office. All seats are reserved, and there is only one price—$1. "A ten dollar show for a dollar, and the dollar to be devoted to philanthropy."

RUTH'S WARDEN ILL

when she led Mrs. Snyder into the room of death, and whispered the last human words of comfort that the murderess was to know.

RUTH, JUDD BURIED

By Universal Service.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—The mortal remains of Ruth Snyder and Judd Gray were laid at rest yesterday many miles from each other.

Ruth's body was placed in a receiving vault in Woodlawn Cemetery, New York. Gray's body was lowered into a grave at East Orange, N. J.

Although Mrs. Snyder's body rested in a vault a crowd of curious women hovered about the Brown home and outside an undertaking establishment in the belief that the body was there.

At the cemetery another group of curious stared at the grave of Harry Brown, Mrs. Snyder's father, and at the open grave awaiting his daughter's casket.

A woman who said she was Mrs. W. Kennedy, "a sympathizer," laid a half dozen white carnations at the father's tombstone.

There was little semblance of mourning as the hearse bore Ruth's body into the cemetery. Andrew Brown, Mrs. Snyder's brother, stepped out of an automobile after following the hearse all the way from Sing Sing in a mad drive to elude reporters and photographers.

He disappeared immediately into the vault, emerging a few minutes later with his hat drawn over his eyes and his hands held before his face to shield his features from the cameras. He jumped into his automobile and was whisked away through the gates.

Mrs. Josephine Brown, Ruth's mother, did not appear at the cemetery or at the concourse funeral home. She is believed to be under the care of a physician.

At East Orange while police drove back hundreds of morbidly curious, Gray's body was lowered into the grave at Rosedale cemetery at 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

Following a brief service, the body was taken to the cemetery by Mrs. Margaret Gray, his mother, little Jane Gray, his daughter and Mrs. Harold Logan, his sister.

had maintained for several weeks, it is said.

Mrs. Frank Nash, who is guarding Velma at night, is a trained nurse, and she is watching the prisoner closely for any symptoms of a complete breakdown, it is said.

Francis W. Poulson and Richard Bostwick, counsel for Mrs. West, confer with their client daily regarding plans for her defense.

"Only one side of the case has been heard as yet," Bostwick told newspapermen. "When all the facts are made known, we feel confident Velma West will be found to have been justified in defending her life the way she did."

"Her acts following the episode may serve to reflect improper motives but, it must be remembered, here were the acts of a girl of 21, struck with the horror of the situation."

Bostwick referred to Mrs. West's flight from Perry, after her husband had been beaten to death with a hammer. She motored to the home of a Cleveland girl chum, where she played bridge until near midnight. Sleeping at her chum's home that night, she calmly went shopping with her mother, Mrs. L. B. Van Woert, of East Cleveland, the next day—the day of her arrest.

EAT MUSH WHEN SHE INSISTS

SYCAMORE, Ill., Jan. 14.—(AP.)—A woman may be only a woman so far as Kipling is concerned, but she's sheriff in DeKalb county, whereupon hangs a tale.

When Mrs. Helen Dolder stepped into the shrievalty Thursday night the 83 prisoners could not restrain a collective laugh up a collective sleeve. A woman sheriff, in their opinion, was too preposterous even to contemplate.

The opportunity to show Sheriff Dolder just how far she could go with them came Thursday night. "Golden grain" was on the bill of fare. That is the jail lingo for what the rest of the country knows as plain corn meal mush.

BALK AT MUSH

The educated appetites of the prisoners balked at "golden grain." Thirty-three prisoners, with positive likes and dislikes concerning jail fare, rebelled at such food. They turned up their noses and turned down their plates.

Which was all right with Sheriff Dolder. Whether they ate are not was none of her concern. The rebels against "golden grain," however, carried their protest farther, making tom-toms of their tin plates and drum sticks of their knives, forks and spoons. To the tintinnabulation of these noise-makers the 33 who would not eat mush began to wail: "When do we eat?"

ORDERS QUIET

Sheriff Dolder told them to shut up. The shouting grew louder. The mush-haters hollered for meat. Again the order for silence; again the yelling.

SHERIFF ACTS

Her patience exhausted, Mrs. Dolder ordered the prisoners back to their cells. This struck them as a good joke.

"Who'll put us in?" they shouted.

This was Mrs. Dolder's cue. She ordered out the deputies. Nozzles were attached to fire hose. In a very few minutes the prisoners were flattened against the jail wall; drenched.

The tin music stopped, and the derision turned to pleading. But the hose played on until they all promised to return to their cells as ordered.

Last night the 83 prisoners sat down to their second supper under the shrievalty of Mrs. Helen Dolder. "Golden grain" was on the menu. Everybody ate.

Illinois' only woman sheriff had demonstrated who was running the DeKalb County Jail.

OLGA AND MIKE HELD

OLGA PAWLISKAK MIKE POPPOWICH

Olga Pawliskak, 17, a tiny blonde Russian, yesterday told a coroner's inquest she killed Nick Anderson, 35, in the kitchen of her home at Fair Oaks, near Ambridge. "I did it because he wanted mother to elope with him," she said. The coroner's jury held her for the grand jury on a charge of murder as it did Mike Poppowich, her fiance. Police cling to the theory that Poppowich killed Anderson because he persisted in annoying Olga. Olga denies this. "I love Mike," she declared to county detectives, "but I wouldn't lie to save him."

CHILDREN SING AT FOSTER'S GRAVE

Never-to-be-forgotten melodies of Stephen C. Foster, were sung by a group of eighth grade pupils at the grave of the famous composer in Allegheny cemetery yesterday in commemoration of the sixty-fourth anniversary of his death. Schenley High School's uniformed band also took part in the exercises which were held under the auspices of the Civic club of Allegheny county.

George Seibel, member of the Civic club committee, presided. He spoke to the children of Foster's melodies and told them that they should help perpetuate the memory of Pittsburgh's great composer.

A wreath was placed on the grave by Miss Eva Gulak, a student at the Stephen C. Foster Public School and three descendants witnessed the ceremonies. They were Mrs. Marion F. Welsh, 75, daughter; Mrs. A. D. Rose, grand-daughter; and her son Dallas, 15.

Mrs. Welsh, timid about riding in automobiles, walked about a mile from the entrance of Allegheny cemetery to the grave. Despite her 75 years she is still very active and is quite an accomplished musician. She says she is tired of hearing the same old songs, however, and is anxious for good new music. She doesn't care a great deal for present day jazz, she says.

He has traveled extensively throughout Mohammedan countries, was educated in Cairo, Egypt, and has been in Pittsburgh in the interest of "The African Muslim Welfare Society of America," and is seeking permission to open a mosque here.

'Moth' Girl Murdered In Flat

By FRED VANDEVENDER
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—Betty Lansiedel Chambers wasn't happy in her Detroit home, so she ran away and trod the path of least resistance. She lived, possibly, much as Ruth Snyder lived. Today she is dead, brutally murdered in her North Shore apartment.

Every available effort is being made to locate and arrest four men, who are believed to have been in the apartment at the time she met her death by strangulation. One of the men, according to Deputy Commissioner Mooney, was the man she introduced as her husband, J. Gordon Chambers. He is said to be a "small fry" racketeer.

The other three men, according to the deputy commissioner, are Samuel Ginsberg, Chic Haldeman and an unnamed Italian, who is said to have visited the girl quite often.

TORTURE PRECEDES DEATH.

The torture to which the beautiful girl was subjected, before death mercifully overcame her, has aroused the detective bureau to a search for the slayers, unparalleled in months.

Coroner's Physician Joseph Springer said today that she had probably died of strangulation, but whether death came from the electric cord wire, which was wound tightly about her neck, or from yards of adhesive tape, wound about her mouth and nostrils, and even over her eyes, he could not say.

He added it was probable that she had been stunned by a blow on the head from a blunt instrument before she was slain.

When found, she was clad in silk pajamas. She was lying on the floor in the center of the room, her head buried in rich, expensive pillows.

Deputy Commissioner Mooney is directing the efforts to solve the mystery, basing his action on two theories. The first is that the girl was slain by her husband, because of jealousy. The second, that she was slain by audacious gangsters, who feared she would reveal their secrets. The later theory is substantiated by notes found by the authorities, addressed to Chambers.

The first theory is upheld by witnesses in the Fontenelle Hotel, where she lived, who say she had many guests, among them the young Italian.

Betty Chambers evidently trod the same path which led to the unsolved murder of Dot King in New York, and many others who met death from the bright lights of the night-life world.

DRY TEST RUINING FORCE

By M. L. RAMSAY,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14—A finish fight was proclaimed today against the virtual scrapping of the prohibition field organization throughout the country by civil service tests which agents have been unabl to pass.

Prohibition Commissioner Jame M. Doran disclosed that approx imately 75 per cent of the presen dry agents, investigators and in spectors, taking the country at larg have "flunked out" on these test or 1,500 out of the total of 2,000.

Administrators' investigations hav shown that most of the would-b agents who passed these tests were unfit for enforcement work, Doran asserted. "Bell boys and janitors were among those who got throug he added.

DEMANDS "SIMPLER" TEST

Contending that it will be impos sible to hold the organization to gether with the material made avail able, Doran has demanded a ne and simpler examination to be hel before the force is "ruined." Three successive conferences with th Civil Service Commission, which de fends the tests as fair and adequat have failed to win this concession.

Meanwhile the organized prohi bitionists are jumping into the fight. Their organizations have written protesting the disruption of th present dry force, according to Doran.

About half the New York force has been rejected for failure to pass the commission's mental or written examination, Doran said. In the North Carolina "moonshine" belt only one agent out of 30 qualified.

3 MINE POLICE ARRESTED

Three coal and iron policemen employed by the Pittsburgh Terminal Coal Company were arrested yesterday on complaint of officials of the United Mine Workers of America and were arraigned before Justice of the Peace J. M. O'Rourke of Snowden township, on assault and battery charges. They were Sergt. Melvin Miller and Policemen A. Watson and Benjamin Hart. They were released under bail of $1,000 each pending a hearing.

The arrest of the officers was caused by Thomas Robertson and Michael Hartneady, mine union organizers who say that three times last week the policemen had arrested and beaten unoffending miners.

Pearl Diver to Put Thrills In Carl Brown's Picture By Battling Octopus Under Sea

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS,
Motion Picture Editor of Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 14.

SOME few months ago we were all invited to look at "Stark Love," photographed and directed by Carl Brown in a remote corner of the isolated Kentucky mountains. The primitive qualities of the picture were intriguing. Now, Carl Brown is to direct an even more interesting subject for Paramount. With the aid of Victor Birch, he is to direct a spectacular film called "The Octopus," to be photographed undersea.

Victor Birch is a deep sea diver of many years' experience. He hails from the South Seas where he made a comfortable living pearl diving and fighting sharks and horrible octopuses. He tells a story of killing an octopus with tentacles measuring 28 feet. It states in Mr. Birch's movie contract that he must meet and conquer a live octopus. There is nothing these movies won't do to give their audiences a thrill.

William K. Howard remains with Cecil De Mille. This little bit of news may astonish all those who knew that Mr. Howard was listening to all sorts of offers from all sorts of producers. But "wise men change their minds; fools never."

Something other than money entered into the arrangement—a chance to direct "The Last Cab," a story by Charles Puffy, Universal's rotund comedian. Having once read Mr. Puffy's account of Vienna before and during the war, Bill Howard just couldn't bear the thought of anyone else directing the story. It would have given him a considerable pang also to have known that Rudolph Schildkraut was playing the old cab man to the tune of any other director's megaphone.

What would all these stars do without Palm Springs, Arrowhead and Del Monte as a rest cure between pictures? Nowhere in the world are there such garden spots to recuperate. Bebe Daniels has returned from Arrowhead, where she went for a brief vacation. Bebe, by the way, will have James Hall for her leading man again. He holds the record for having played in more of Bebe's pictures than any other Paramount player. The new picture, "Hold Everything," will not go into production for a few weeks. All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy and Bebe has been working fast and furiously lately.

Allow me to present Chandler Sprague, new editor-in-chief of the Fox Film Company. Mr. Sprague, who has had his motion picture training with John Considine and later as assistant to Barney Glazer, was formerly a newspaper man. Its always good news to be able to announce the success of a newspaper writer. We like to feel the men and women in our own craft can win success in the uncertain motion picture field. Right now there are many ex-newspapermen engaged in writing publicity, in scenario departments and even in Hollywood executive positions.

Taking out fire insurance after a fire is very much the same as locking the stable door after the horse is stolen—both of them an unfortunate afterthought. Yet, Gertrude Olmstead and Robert Leonard, having had all their Christmas gifts burned, their pet dog smothered, and their clothes ruined, would be foolish indeed if they did not protect themselves from any such future tragedy. Gertrude's clothes were completely ruined by smoke—so much so that she had to borrow an evening wrap to wear to the Mayfair. "To think," she wailed, "I didn't even have a chance to wear any of my pretty Christmas presents." The fire started from the lights on the Christmas tree. I don't know any moral about that, do you?

Murnau has started work. You'd know it by visiting the Fox Studio, for his set is pointed out to all visitors. "The Four Devils" has a childhood sequence and it will be interesting to see if the youngsters look like the grownups. Philip Delacy has been chosen to represent Barry Norton as a child, Jack Parker portrays Charlie Morton, Dawn O'Day is an infant Janet Gaynor, and Anita Frenault, a baby, Nancy Drexel. The boys have a mother, of course, to be played by Claire McDowell.

CLAIRTON CHURCH CELEBRATES

QUARTER OF A CENTURY OLD

The First Presbyterian Church of Clairton, whose present home is shown above, is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary. The congregation was organized January 2, 1903, under leadership of the Rev. George W. Chalfant. There were only 22 members at the start; now there are 500, of whom about 100 were recently received into membership. The Rev. John K. Bibby, inset, the present minister, is the fifth the church has had.

OPERAS FURNISH FILM PLOTS

An interesting story of the first efforts of motion picture producers to film musical comedies is told by Ernst Lubitsch, director of the elaborate motion picture version of "The Student Prince," in which Ramon Navarro and Norma Shearer will be seen in the Penn, beginning January 20.

"The first musical comedy selected for filming was Gilbert & Sullivan's "The Mikado,"" says Director Lubitsch, "and strangely enough, that great musical success has never again found its way to the screen.

"The screen play in those days was of course primitive, so that this work with "The Mikado" was a step far in advance of its day, but no one dreamed of the vast prophecy which it foretold.

"It was not until Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer had made such a success with "The Merry Widow," starring Mae Murray and John Gilbert, that the eyes of the motion picture producers were opened to the value of comic opera as screen material. Previous to the great success of "The Merry Widow," light opera was considered too slight of plot and construction to be of use for films.

"Strange to say, the so-called comic opera proves not to be a comedy at all on the screen. The basis of every operetta is romance, and the comedy is supplied by the comedian and the songs. Cut out this one phase of it—and it is romance."

To name just a few of the operettas which have been made into entertaining photoplays, and so back up Mr. Lubitsch's point, there have been the two Marion Davies starring pictures, "The Red Mill" and "The Fair Co-ed," both of which were adapted from musical comedies, and "The Waltz Dream," an UFA production, also based on a musical play. Soon "Rose Marie," another adaption of a musical success will be seen, with Joan Crawford and James Murray in the leading roles.

Not only has the cinema drawn from this lighter side of the musical stage for its material, but it has also taken themes and plots from opera and from famous or popular songs. The five most noteworthy pictures which have been born from operatic inspirations are "La Boheme," "Siegfried," "Carmen," "Faust" and "Camille."

Make a Budget

National Thrift Week which starts Monday turns one's thoughts to budgeting.

"I believe in budgets and want the people to believe in them" President Coolidge has said.

A budget places the economic facts of life before you in black and white. It gives you an intelligent control of your expenditures. It tells you where your money is going instead of accounting for it after it is spent.

Our budget expert will gladly advise you and help in planning a budget or answer questions on household finance. Ask for a Budget Analysis Blank and an Account Book.

PATRICIA PITT'S COMMENT ON SOCIETY HAPPENINGS

Two Weddings Take Foreground in Social World

TWO weddings, one at church and the other at home, take the social foreground today. The former, of course, is that of Dorothea Chess, daughter of Mrs. Walter Chess of Bennington avenue, and Robert Markham Marshall, which took place at 12:30 o'clock in the Episcopal Church of the Redeemer, with the Rev. Dr. Robert Nelson Meade officiating.

Dorothea, who was given away by her brother, David Walter Chess, wore an afternoon frock of rose beige crepe with a hat to match, and her shoulder corsage was of butterfly roses. Her small niece, Cynthia Stowe Heffron, daughter of the John M. Heffrons of Greenwich, Conn., was her flower girl, wearing a dress of Nile green crepe de chine with a deep collar of lace, and carrying a Colonial bouquet.

Simon Patterson was best man and the ushers included Dr. Gilpin McCain and John B. Luckie, both of Pittsburgh. A small breakfast followed the ceremony in the Chess home and later the young Marshalls left for an eastern trip. They are to live with Mrs. Chess in Bennington avenue and will be at home there after February 15.

Dorothea's two sisters, Mrs. Heffron and Mrs. Charles Turner Joy of Washington, came on for the wedding, as did Mr. Marshall's sister, Mrs. Percy Leard, and her son, Robert Leard of Ravenna O.

Katherine Humphreys is the other bride of today. She will marry Paul B. Dickey, son of the William Warren Dickeys of South Fairmont avenue, at a wedding at 5:30 o'clock in the home of her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. W. Y. Humphreys, in South Dallas avenue. Her sister, Mrs. Malcolm W. Leech, will be matron of honor and the bridesmaids are to be Mrs. Frederick Gwinner III, Mrs. Thomas McCutcheon, Mrs. Alan S. Humphreys and Elizabeth Leovy. Mrs. Leech's small daughter, Betty, is to be flower girl.

WELSH CLUBS ARE HOST TO NATIONAL OFFICERS

About 150 women attended the second annual group meeting of the Women's Welsh Club of Pittsburgh, Homestead, New Kensington, Carnegie and McKeesport, which was held yesterday in the Fort Pitt Hotel. The morning session was taken up largely in introducing the several national officers who were present, Mrs. C. C. Grosser, of Cleveland, the national president; Mrs. A. C. Vaughan, of Lakewood, first vice president; Mrs. Lloyd Roberts, of Youngstown, secretary; Mrs. Arthur Bevan, of Warren, treasurer, and Mrs. T. Owen Charles, of Pittsburgh, national organizer. The afternoon session was devoted entirely to business, much of it having to do with the Welsh Home for the Aged at Rocky River, maintenance of which is the chief object of the clubs.

The luncheon hour, however, was purely social and after an invocation by Mrs. M. J. McGeary, president of the New Kensington club, the courses were interspersed with program numbers. Chief of these were two groups of soprano solos, sung with great sweetness and effectiveness by Mrs. Elsie Johns Wright, with Miss Helen Thomas at the piano. Mrs. Levi Thomas, of Homestead, led assembly singing of verses written by her to the national officers and for this Miss Jane Davies accompanied. A few informal speeches filled out the program. Mrs. T. R. Davies, of the Homestead club, and Mrs. Jessie Meredith, of McKeesport, were the official luncheon hostesses. Mrs. Sydney Davis is Carnegie president and Mrs. Fred W. Jones heads the Pittsburgh group. Green and yellow, the club colors, were carried out in the decorations with narcissus, broad crepe paper streamers and candles.

The Allegheny County Federation of Women's Clubs will hold its annual meeting January 27 in the Congress of Clubs with the Wimodausis Club members as hostesses. Election of a first vice president, secretary and the five district chairmen will take place. Miss Florance Dibert, a former president of the State Federation and now vice president in the General Federation, has been asked to speak, and the music will be in charge of Mrs. W. J. Osborne, of Duquesne, who has just been made state chairman of music. Mrs. R. B. Perry is taking luncheon reservations.

Miss Mary B. Gilson, a former Pittsburgher and now industrial consultant and research worker with a New York firm, spoke to the College Club yesterday on the disciplinary phase of industrial relations, using discipline in the sense of training the individual to recognize his responsibility to the group. In large organizations, Miss Gilson said, personal contact must of necessity be replaced by logical and scientific methods, or discipline. Various forms of co-operation between management and workers are lessening the need and amount of discipline. Miss Gilson concluded her talk by reading excerpts from mercantile writings of the end of the eighteenth century and the present, showing a similarity in opposition to the industrial changes.

Tuesday morning "The Coquette" will be discussed in the club drama class, under the leadership of Mrs. Charles Dahlinger.

New England poets were studied yesterday by the Carnegie Woman's Club at a meeting in the Y. W. C. A. at which Mrs. Russell Halpin was hostess. With Mrs. Bert Rowlands as leader Mrs. W. C. C. Johnston discussed Walt Whitman, Mrs. Earl Cook, Cotton Mather; Mrs. William Brown, Longfellow; Mrs. Leonard McMillan, Bryant, and Mrs. Seymour Sloan's paper on Lowell was read by her daughter, Mrs. Charles Herman. The members responded to roll call by giving quotations from the writers and music was furnished by Mrs. John Conrad, soprano, accompanied by Mrs. Walter Yourd.

* * *

Dr. J. Freeman Guy, superintendent of Bellevue schools, will speak on "The New Education" at the meeting of the Ingram Women's Club Monday night when the club members will have their husbands as guests. Captain William Thaw of Pittsburgh First American on the Muster Roll of the Fighting Lafayette Escadrille

American Airmen Who Fought in French Air Service

These are some of the lion-hearted Americans who early in the war acted as the eyes of the French army. From left to right, in the rear row—Lawrence Rumsey, Paul Pavelka, Marshall, a French officer; Dudley Hill and Kiffin Rockwell. In front row—Bert Hall, Lieutenant De Laage de Meux, Captain Georges Thenault, Captain William Thaw of Pittsburgh, Captain Ammonier Meyer (a French priest) and Charles Choteux Johnson.

SPORT COMMENT by JAMES J. LONG

SOME of the biggest stars in the major baseball leagues appear to be also among the easiest to satisfy and the least difficult to bring into the fold again when the time comes annually for the signing of new contracts.

The Pittsburgh club has had some experiences of that sort with top-notchers like Pie Traynor, Remy Kremer, Babe Adams and others, President Dreyfuss always offered them what he considered them to be worth in all fairness, and almost invariably they signed without delay.

JESS PETTY.

Now an other instance is reported from Brooklyn, where Jess Petty the best left-hand pitcher in the National League if not in both loops, has just penned his signature on the dotted line for 1928.

IT HAD been expected that Petty would be difficult to sign, for though he lost more games than he won in 1927 it was not due to any fault of his own, as he pitched great ball all season and was generally beaten because his mates made only one or two runs behind him.

The stage was all set for a holdout, and that was what every one expected, but Petty didn't haggle for a minute. He isn't that kind. If a contract looks fair to him he dashes off his name and that ends the matter. Whether or not his reported 1927 salary of $12,000 was increased for 1928 is not known, but in any event Petty signed a contract the instant it was handed to him.

HOGAN.

Incidentally, Petty was the first Brooklyn player to sign for this year, and it may also be timely to mention that Robin management counts more heavily upon him for 1928 than upon any other player in its list of reserved athletes. The Pittsburgh club became aware of the latter fact when it tried to make a deal for Petty more than a month ago.

Petty, by the way, is in a vaudeville act with Al Mamaux.

WHICH is the more profitable—to pay a six-figure price for a couple of minor league baseball players who look like the real class, or to spend the same amount in small sums for a whole swarm of young players among whom you may not find a single good one?

Most fans will string along with the first end of the proposition, and that is the one usually followed by the more liberal class of major league club owners, but there are some in the game who will not risk big money on one or two players, but who prefer to shop at the comparative five-and-ten-cent stores.

ACCORDING to reports from Somerville, Mass., the home town of Frank Hogan, the news of the Hornsby-Welsh-Hogan deal came as a great surprise to the young catcher. He realizes that it means a promotion for him, but at the same time he regrets leaving the friends among whom he has grown up near the Hub.

"I don't know what to say," exclaimed Hogan. "My friends are all around Boston. I was brought up around Boston and have become attached to my old Lincoln Park followers, the high gang who used to trail along with my old side-kick, Danny MacFayden, now of the Red Sox, and Haskell Billings, now of Detroit, and the Twilight league followers who gave me plenty of encouragement when I had big league aspirations.

"Of course, baseball is a business, and I want to get ahead, as any business man would wish, so I must say that I consider my end of the deal as a great stepping-stone to a berth I hope to attain in the game. It looks as though I got a lucky break in this deal even though it isn't going to be so good to take leaving my old pals on the Braves."

PITTSBURGH hockey fans who have come to reckon the acquisition of Martin Burke as one of the big factors that brought about the improvement in the local ice team, will regret to learn that the popular new defense man is not to be a fixture here.

BURKE.

From sources close to the deal that shifted Burke to Pittsburgh from Les Canadiens in exchange for Charley Langlois, the agreement was that the trade was to stand for only the remainder of the present season, and that Burke must be turned back to the Canadiens next winter.

What disposal will be made of Langlois if Pittsburgh does want to take him back for next season has not been given out by the officials of either club.

The Panther feeds tonight!

With the tingling taste of last night's sweet basketball victory over Carnegie Tech still lingering on its palate, the University of Pittsburgh will sit down at the banquet table in the William Penn Hotel tonight to honor the 1927 Pitt varsity football team, recognized Eastern Intercollegiate champions and accounted one of the greatest elevens ever to represent the university.

Doc Carlson and his undefeated cagers served the banquet cocktail last evening, when they walloped dear old Carnegie Tech in the first of the annual three-game series on the Stadium Pavilion court. The score of the ball game, when everything was checked up, was 67-28.

Tonight the cagers will share with the footballers the honors of the day. Eight consecutive times they have taken the floor against formidable rivals and have come off on the long end of the score each time. Bob Zuppke, veteran Illinois coach, when he addresses the gathering this evening, will talk to both a championship and a potential championship team.

Dr. P. V. (Packy) McParland is to be toastmaster, and in addition to Zuppe, will introduce as speakers Chancellor Bowman, Coach Sutherland, Capt. Gibby Welch of the champions and the captain-elect, who either will be Alex Fox, guard, or Honey Guarino, end. One or the other is to elected prior to the banquet, and will be carried into the banquet hall in traditional style, encased in the giant football and borne on the shoulders of his teammates.

In the basketball preliminary last night the Pitt freshmen defeated the Tartan Plebes, 37-31.

A. A. Guarino, better known as Honey, is one of the two candidates for the Pitt football captaincy for next fall, to be decided by election at the annual banquet in the William Penn Hotel this evening. Service Tilt Hope Not Dead

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—(INS.)—The athletes of Congress today banded together to save the annual Army-Navy game as one of the great traditions of American military service.

Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr. (R.), of New York, representing the West Point district, and Representative Fred Britten (R.) of Illinois, a member of the House Naval Affairs Committee, are leading the compromise effort. Fish was an all-American guard at Harvard and Britten is a devotee of amateur athletics.

"West Point and Annapolis will play again next year despite their announcement that athletic relations have been broken," Representative Fish declared today.

"Conferences are under way now, and Mr. Britten and I have agreed to take the matter before President Coolidge next week if necessary. I have requested West Point authorities to put a clause in any contract they may sign with another institution for the Navy's date, permitting it to be canceled on 60 days' notice."

Cubs Bid For Rog Hornsby

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—(AP.)—Players or money, or both, are available for a trade for Rogers Hornsby if the Boston club would consider it, officials of the Chicago Cubs said today, and some of the baseball experts went so far as to deduce from the non-committal answers of President William Veeck that an offer already had been made to Judge Fuchs, of the Braves.

"The worst that Boston could say would be no," was the answer of President Veeck to one question, whether it was regarded as futile to start negotiations for the star second baseman. "The Cubs will make any deal calculated to strengthen the team, and we would like to have Hornsby."

After several days' absence in Indiana, Commissioner Landis returned to his office yesterday, but declined to make any comment on the Hornsby case.

SLOW BOUT FAILS TO THRILL FANS

By DAMON RUNYON,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—They scrambled up a draw decision out of the 12 rounds of fighting and hugging between Josef Paul Cukoschay, of Boston, otherwise Jack Sharkey, and Tom Heeney, of New Zealand at Madison Square Garden last night.

Johnny Buckley, Sharkey's manager, said today he would ask for a return bout. Sharkey himself said he had "no kick coming" and declined to amplify the statement.

The 16,000 citizens who chucked $161,631 into Mr. Tex Rickard's yawning coffers for the privilege of viewing this exhibition seemed about equally divided as to the merit of the decision, which would argue that it must have been about right.

All hands agreed that it wasn't much of a fight any way you looked at it, no knockdowns, no great amount of gore, no anything. The recess that Sharkey has enjoyed since the night Jack Dempsey poked the wind out of him up at the Yankee Stadium didn't do him any good.

Sharkey did plenty of holding but I thought he did most of what fighting was done. I doubt that there will be any uproar for a return bout between these boys, despite the draw. Mr. William Gibson, manager of Mr. Gene Tunney, sat at the ringside, all eyes, looking for a prospective customer for Mr. Tunney next summer, but after about the fourth round Mr. Gibson dozed off under the soporific influence of the indubitable fact that there was nothing doing here.

Heeney has great courage, and in one of those oldtime long-distance beats would be a tough customer for any man in the world. He can "take 'em" and he never stops trying.

If Kisses Repel Be on Your Guard

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

SOME time ago I printed in this column, a letter presenting the problem: Is it ever wise to marry one whose kisses are repellant?

Now comes a letter of comment:

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"A recent article of yours, quoting a letter from a young lady who found her friend's kisses repulsive, brings back thoughts from my own past.

"When I was 20, I met a girl of splendid character and refinement. I was away from home and lonely. She was kind to me and I saw her often.

"Her kisses were repulsive to me, but I thought kisses were a form of sin, anyway, and rather prided myself on being 'holy' enough not to enjoy them.

"We were married and lived together four years. We were congenial. I was a model husband, a good provider and decidedly successful in business.

"Finally, I met a girl of 19 in my own home. She belonged to a prominent family. I knew her father in a business way. Our name was always on their guest list and their names were on ours.

"The daughter was kept under a severe restraint. In talking with her I realized that she was much interested in matters that I, too, was most enthusiastic about. She loved the outdoors, the mountains, skiing, horseback riding. She was an esthetic dancer of no little ability.

"I helped her organize an amateur play. Naturally, I saw her often. My wife never questioned my interest in the girl, because she knew I was above any dishonorable practice.

"On Christmas Eve the girl came to our home with an armful of holly and Christmas greens. It was late afternoon. A maid let her in.

"There she stood—a vivid brunet—hair as black as the coals on the hearth, lips red as the berries of the holly she carried, great brown eyes vieing in warmth and radiance with the roaring fire in the open fireplace. A northern blizzard raging outside, had sprinkled her fur coat and jaunty hat with snow.

"That moment was the turning point of my life. I kissed her—the first real kiss I had ever experienced. I crushed holly and mistletoe, fur coat, girl and all in one powerful embrace. She struggled frantically. Her eyes blazed.

"I showered her with kisses. She relaxed ever so slightly for a second, then tore loose from my grasp, out the door and across the snowdrifts, running like a frightened deer, leaving nothing but scattered bits of holly to show it was not all a dream.

"Within three months all my possessions had been transferred to my 'former' wife and I set sail with my new bride. I sacrificed a highly profitable business, every piece of property I owned and nearly every cent I had.

"We burned every bridge behind us and faced the world with just ourselves. We didn't care—'just give us each other!' We went went away six years ago—the six happiest years of my life, with a companion and sweetheart whom I have loved and cherished. A darling boy, with big brown eyes like his mother's—he was three on Christmas Day—shares our romps and pleasures.

"I have recouped all my losses. I have reached heights I would never have attempted before. Her family have been proud to welcome her back.

"But would it not have saved many a heartache if I had waited for the girl who thrills me with her kisses?

"A READER."

Pleasures can be bought at too high a cost. Broken vows, treachery to a trusting woman, a wrecked home, the broken heart of a wife of "splendid character" who was kind to you and loved you—a vaguely uneasy conscience—is happiness at this price of dishonor and cruelty worthwhile and likely to last, my friends?

As the situation stands, my suggestion is: Continue to cherish your second wife, making the best of things as they are. Do not permit this marriage also to be wrecked by the power of an indiscreet, impulsive kiss.

For the kiss, between a man and a woman, primarily an expression of physical attraction, may blind the judgment, and lull conscience, hence the danger of cheapening it.

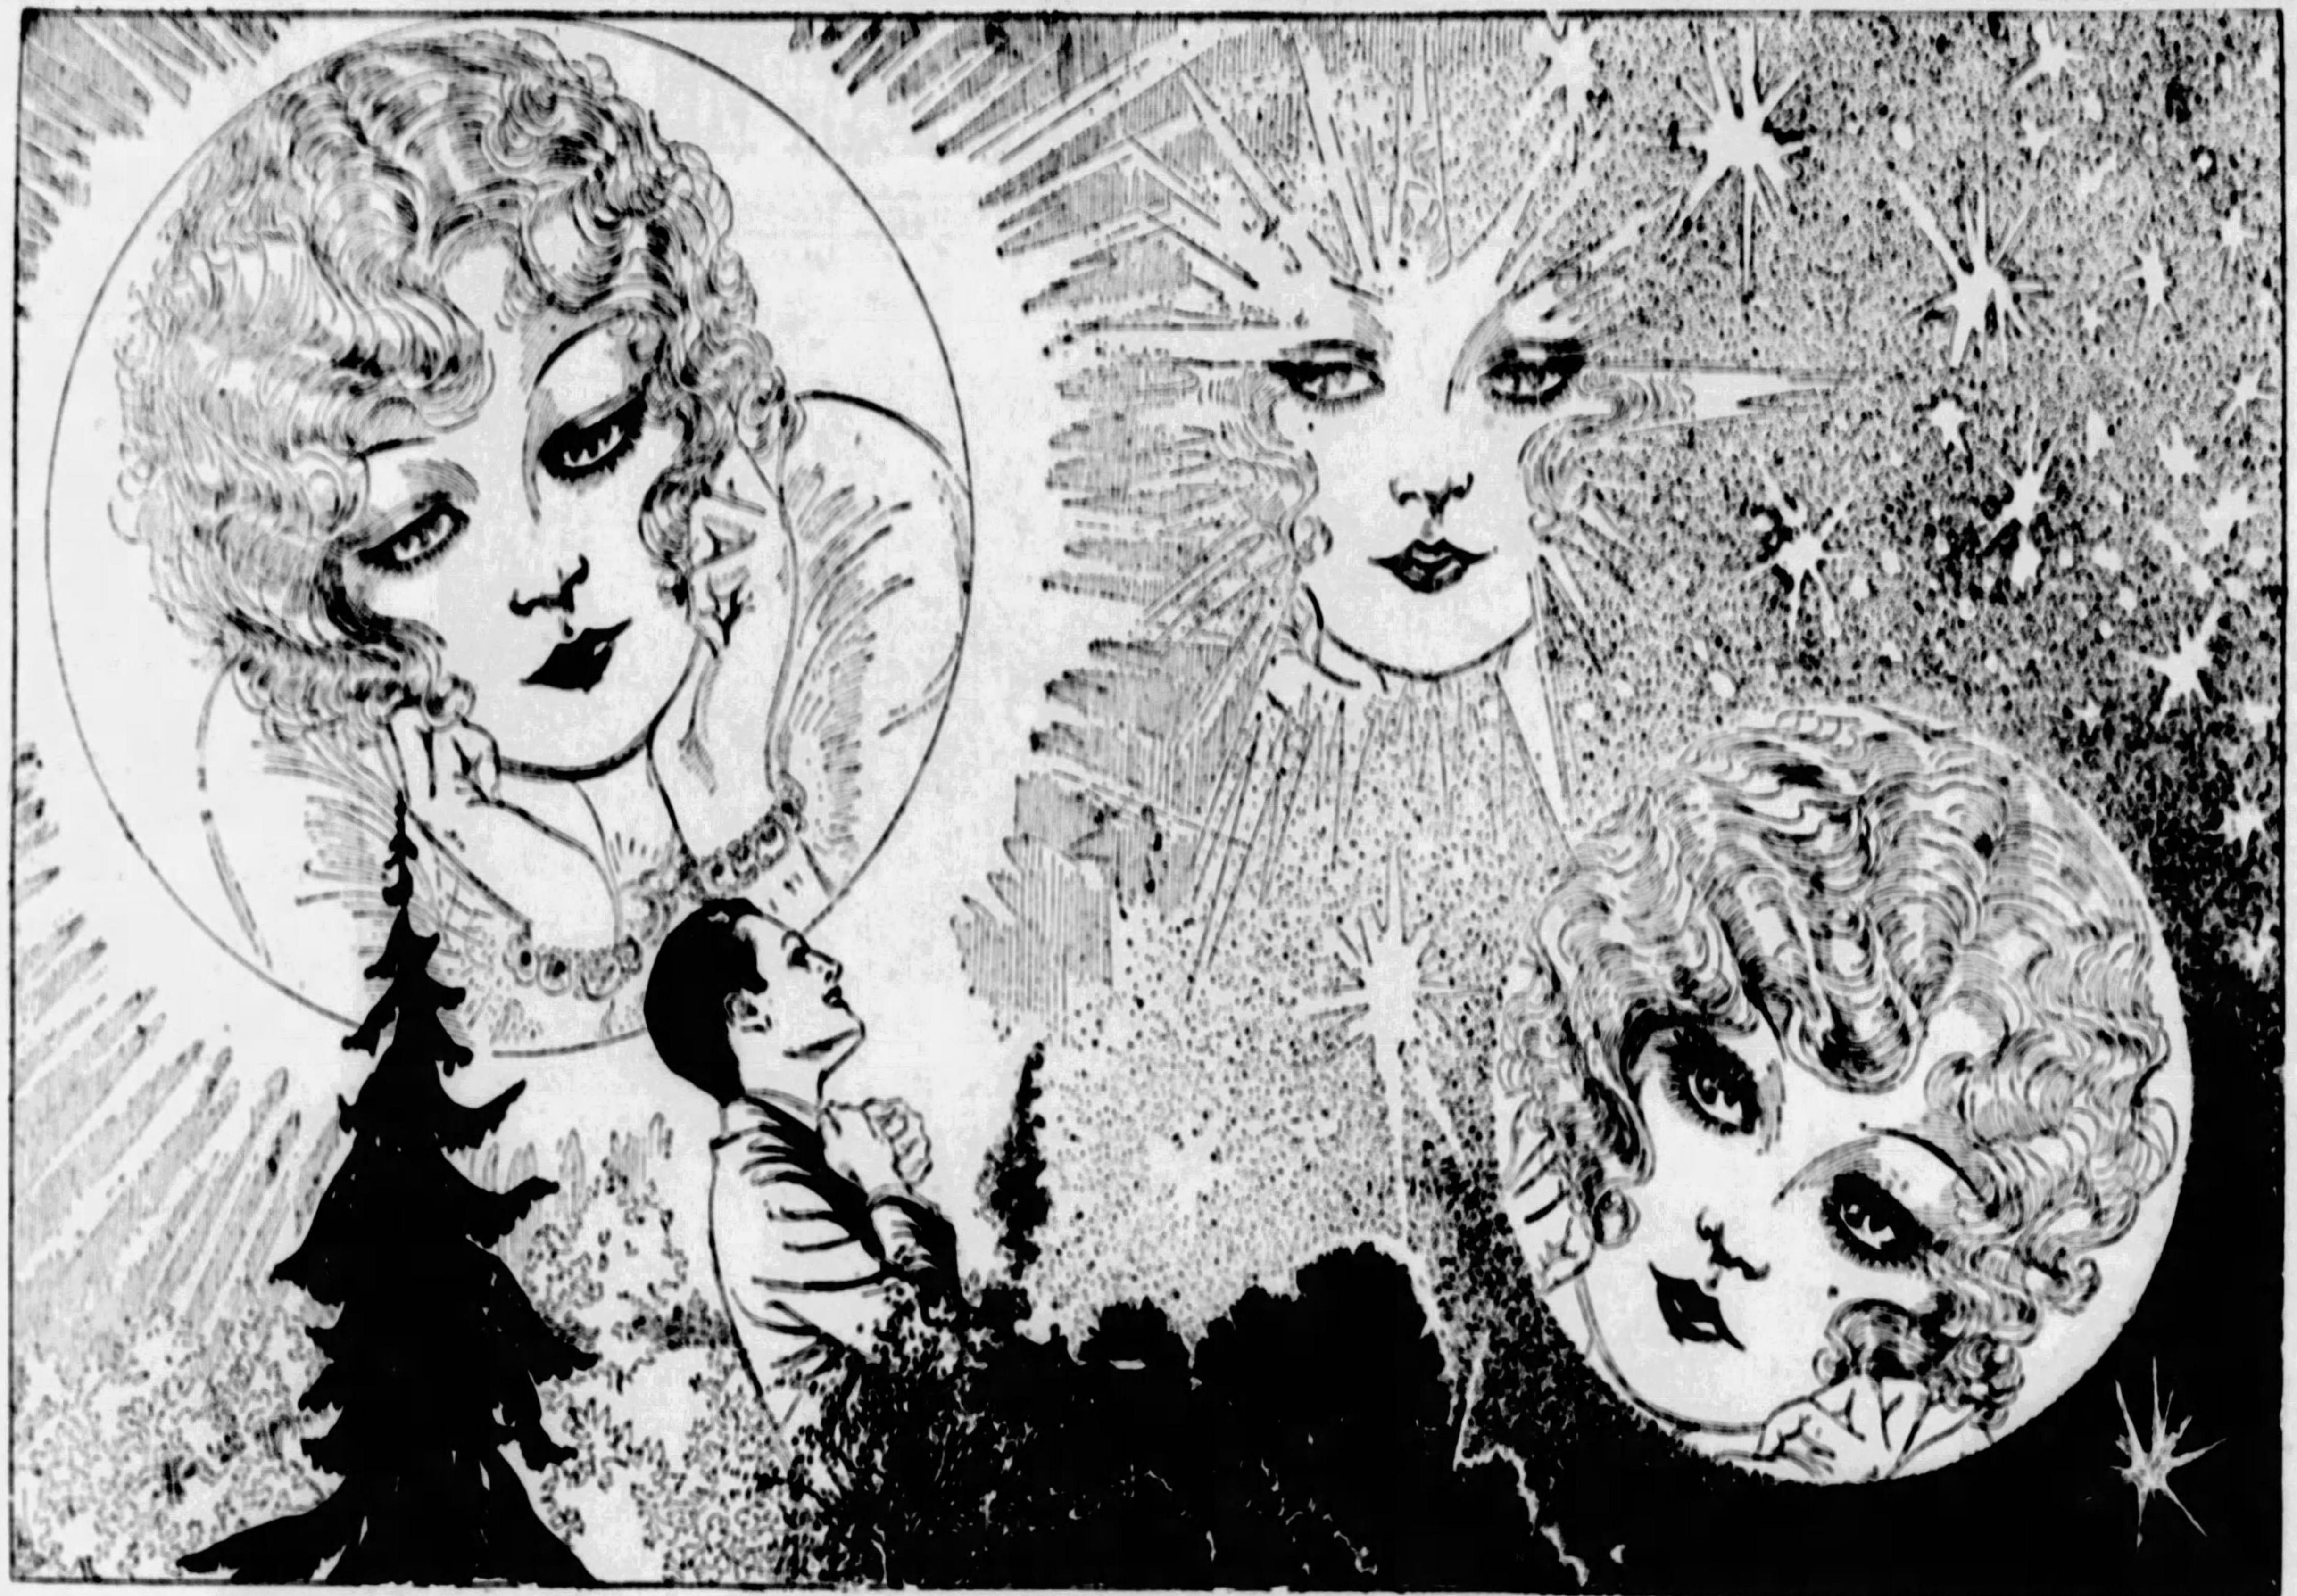
HIS SUN, MOON AND STARS

Drawn by Nell Brinkley



YOUNG love is not always "calf love"; or a soft sentiment to be smiled down by the older crew. Sometimes it's the passion of a boy's man's-life, and lasts through years a deeper and more swaying affection, or, unrealized, a living and always memorable dream that makes him see life as a beautiful thing; or, alas, if the nature of him was just right and the face of his idol not worthy, a bitter flavour that makes his world, "for good," a spectacle through sardonic glasses.

His Sun, Moon and Stars! Shining on his stormy days, she illumines the blackest night. She makes a rocky path radiant in every corner, and not such a bumpy thing after all. She whips ambition to a champing, winged steed that frets to climb the diziest stars. And the last, and dizziest star is her bright self. She is all three at the same time; the warm and living sun; the glowing and comforting moon; the brilliant stars, filling day and night. He eats, sleeps, and works with one dream swaying his busy brain and heart. She makes him better, kinder, happier.

A wise girl knows very well when she is THIS to a man or boy. And a nice and wise one uses her power for his success, his honesty, his goodness and happiness.

Wait a Bit; Over-Haste Needless

By LUCY LOWELL

IN New York there are a thousand busy corners where traffic rolls all day long and nearly all night in a furious stream and where people gather every minute of every hour in twitching, seething knots, awaiting a chance to scurry on.

I watched from a high window motors pouring endlessly, the hurrying crowd.

Always hurrying. Rushing to get to some place with all possible expedition so they then may rush on to some other place. Impatient, sometimes frantic, senselessly driven.

They will tell you they must do this; make haste to get things done. Swoop upon achievement lest it run too far ahead.

I thought of the poem, "Waiting," by John Burroughs:

"Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind nor tide nor sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo! My own shall come to me.

"I stay my haste, I make delays;
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face."

That's it—what belongs to you cannot escape you. And not all your insensate rushing, your raving against time or delay can bring it one step nearer, shorten by one instant the time that must pass before you hold it in your hands.

But those things can hurt you: they can strike the smile from your lips, the songs from your heart.

Read the last exquisite stanza of "Waiting":

"The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal wave unto the sea;
Nor time nor space, nor deep nor high,
Can keep my own away from me."

HOW TO KEEP WELL

by Royal S. Copeland, M.D.
U.S. Senator from New York

Laugh, and Laugh Heartily, for Health

AN OLD friend of mine, an eminent physician, insists that his patients must laugh. They must laugh heartily a good many times every day. They must laugh even if there is no particular reason for doing so.

DR COPELAND

"If there is a good joke that tempts to laughter," he says, "then the laughter is ever so much more spontaneous, is deeper, ventilates the lungs, stimulates the heart and sets the blood coursing through the body, and makes all the organs do their work better." That is good sense, isn't it?

My friend places the responsibility on the medical profession. He says, "To allow patients who are suffering from depression of any kind, or who are over-solicitous about themselves, to go away from the physician's office without urging them to try the effect of laughter, is to miss one of the most potent agents for good, so far as the physical being is concerned."

I am positively afraid of persons who never laugh. They give me a peculiar form of stage fright. I don't know what to say to them or how to act in their presence.

When you run on to a strange dog and the animal, rigid in every muscle, just looks at you, you feel a disagreeable chill running up your spine. My! what a relief it is to have the beast wag its tail, even if it's only half an inch!

I experience a modified form of the same sensation when I am thrown in company with a person who rarely cracks his face and never laughs. Phew! It's a chilly atmosphere!

Of course lots of people laugh inside. The only outward sign is a deepening of the wrinkles at the outer corner of the eyes. They may be enjoying themselves, but they aren't adding to the joys of the occasion.

Furthermore, the inside laugher gets no physical benefit from his laughing. It does him no more physical good than it would to raise a banner now and then, inscribed, "I am laughing."

As my doctor friend says, a good deep laugh opens the lungs, stimulates the heart, and sends the blood in cleansing stream to every part of the body. There is no unpleasant after-effect as there might be to an unaccustomed cocktail, and a hearty laugh is just as stimulating to the system.

O laughless one! Why don't you try some honest, generous, side-splitting laughs? Even though you have to pretend and merely act the part, it will be the beginning of what may become a habit, a welcome and health-promoting habit.

Try a few laughs in front of your mirror. This will be good practice for you and you will be amazed to see how much more attractive you look with a broad smile on your usually expressionless face.

Don't be a sphinx. Be a cheerful, smiling, laughing, agreeable companion. You will add years to your expectancy of life by heeding this suggestion.

The crest and crowning of all good,
Life's final star is Brotherhood.
—EDWARD MARKHAM.

SUNDAY'S horoscope shows excellent prospects for all religious, benevolent and mystical activities. These should bring benefits, but be careful in signing all writings and documents.

Those whose birthday it is may look forward to a fairly prosperous and progressive year in business, but papers, contracts or letters may promote anxiety unless cautiously signed. Be punctilious in all matters.

A child born on this day should be well qualified for success, but may require rigid training in the need for using principle rather than expediency in its dealings.

Sayings of Mrs. Solomon

By HELEN ROWLAND

MAN'S FRAGILE LOVE

WHAT is lighter, oh my Daughter, what is more fragile, what is more easily killed, than a man's love?

* * *

For lo, one touch of jealousy, one word of reproach, and behold it hath turned from glowing devotion into icy indifference. Yea, it hath become the buttermilk of human kindness, which is scorn!

* * *

One drop of sarcasm, one bitter recrimination, one breath of nagging, and, alas, it is as last June's roses withered and dried and blown away!

HELEN ROWLAND

One stab at a man's vanity, and lo, his love writheth and expireth! And he departeth in haste to find the next women who will pour balm upon its wounds and restore his self-esteem with flattery.

* * *

Go to. How many a man's love hath been smothered to death by one kiss too many, and strangled to death by a damsel that clung for one moment too long about his neck! How many a masculine grande passion hath been drowned in a shower of feminine tears!

* * *

How cautious then, must a woman be, if she would keep the fragile flower of a man's love alive!. For, eternal vigilance is the price of his devotion!

* * *

But a woman's love is a hardy plant, which weathereth all storms, and, like unto a dandelion, flourisheth where it is most discouraged.

* * *

Though her vanity suffereth as an oyster that is salted, every day of her life, yet will her love survive and continue to wax strong.

* * *

Though her heart be bruised and her pride dealt a black eye, still will she continue to cling unto her passion for a man, as a dog to a pet bone, or a cat to its favorite pillow.

* * *

Though her affections be starved, yet will her love manage to subsist upon crumbs of attention and to thrive upon the thin-soup of hope.

* * *

For, verily, verily, a woman's love is as an air-plant, which liveth upon neglect and hot-air.

* * *

But a man's love is as a delicate orchid, which fadeth at a touch, droopeth beneath the warmth of a woman's response, and remaineth fresh and beautiful only when it is kept upon ICE!

FOR THE LOVELORN

Spirit of '76

DEAR MISS GALE:

I am very much interested in your column. I have never written to you before, but am doing so now to help uphold my type of our set and to comment, if I may, on several letters appearing in the column recently. The advice given to girls by "One Who Knows" is of the finest stock I have yet read. These so-called modern sheiks remind me of a brand new doll, all wound up to talk and walk, but I can say, "woe unto them when they run down." Experience is the best teacher, so I know your fine letter, "Just Seventeen," is given from the bottom of your heart. I, like you, wish girls would abide by your advice. To the "Blue-Eyed Blonde Boy" I wish to say, if you desire to find a true, old fashioned girl look for a girl who is a nature lover, one who is not afraid of a little work and an honest-to-goodness girl—not a "French doll." Now allow me, Miss Gale, to say concerning "modernism." I have no use for these modern sheiks, nor for these modern vamps. When I see them I just long to take soap and water and wash all the falseness off and then stand them up beside a "real" girl. I am not prejudiced against the use of cosmetics for I use them myself occasionally, but why cover up our faces when the public can see through all layers of paint and powder? I am a junior in high school and am 17 years old. I intend to be a nurse when I finish school and I am now trying to live the pure and honest life of a true nurse. I have had no love cases, but have some boy friends, none of whom I can boast because none has come up to my standard as yet. But I feel 'way down in my heart that the One will show up some time. It is said "The best cometh to him that waiteth," so I'll wait. When I read the letters in this column they strike me in one of three ways: 1. I'd like to shake the writer for being so foolish; 2. I feel sorry for the writer, and 3. I rejoice to know that there is someone who has the power to say no, when no is needed and to say yes when yes is needed.

SPIRIT OF '76.

I am delighted to know that you have such high ideals, my dear. Always keep them.

Romany Child

DEAR MISS GALE:

I have a friend of whom I am very fond. A few weeks ago he happened to see me with another boy acquaintance, and I did not pay much attention to him. The next time he saw me he did not speak to me. Consequently I've snubbed him ever since. I wrote him a note the other day, asking him frankly why we should give up our friendship for such a silly reason. I said, frankly, that if we had tired of each other, we need not go on being close friends, but there was no reason why we should be enemies. I have not sent him this note yet, however. Should I, or should I wait for him to make the first move? He is very stubborn, but I do not think he wishes to cease being friends. We are not in love, of course. We are much too young, but we have always been pals and I hate to break up our friendship. Please tell me what to do. Thanking you, and wishing you lots of luck in your column, I am

ROMANY CHILD.

That sounds like a very friendly little note, my dear, and I see no reason why you should not send it.

Saving a School's Morale

By L. LAMAR MATTHEWS

CONSTERNATION, indignation and maledictions fell from the lips of the students at Phillips High School.

Boys and girls arriving for their day's work found their building disfigured with red paint. On the heavy glass doors, on the stone steps and on the stately white columns the words "Ensley High" were posted in large red letters.

This was Friday morning. The big football game of the year between the rival teams was to be played on Saturday!

Naturally they concluded that students from Ensley had done the painting.

The school principal beheld the offense at 8 o'clock. At one minute after eight he had called in the head janitor and his assistants.

"Stop everything else. Take your brushes and cleaning fluids and remove that paint from the building," he said.

And forthwith the faithful janitors set to work to erase the lettering.

"We do not want the pupils reminded of the spirit that prompted this act of vandalism," he told his teachers. "The sooner we remove every sign of the thing, the easier it will be for them to forget it."

Then before the tardy bell rang the principal at Ensley was calling over the telephone. The two men exchanged information, and it was found that the Ensley building had been similarly defaced with the words, "Phillips High!"

Neither principal had the remotest idea as to the identity of the offender, but it seemed reasonable to suppose that the same culprits committed both offenses.

After their telephone conference they each assembled their schools at once and announced that both buildings had been painted in the same manner.

"None of us believe that there is a pupil in either school who would have stooped to the act of defacing a rival's building. You have too much sense and too much decency and too much good sportsmanship to consider it for a moment. The offenders are outside our ranks and we are going to find them."

That cleared every boy in both schools of suspicion. There were of course a few boys in each school who might have committed that moronic deed. But if the man in authority had intimated that he suspected one of his own pupils, the eyes of the school would have been turned upon the boys who usually misbehaved. Then the very souls of those bad little boys would have been sore with the injustice and the disgrace of the thing.

Furthermore, the effect upon the morale of the whole student body would have been harmful.

The pupils went out of the auditorium feeling that some insolent, insulting outsider had done this thing to them and to their friendly rivals; and that their standards were too high to permit of such conduct among their own.

Quick work, good judgment, good pedagogy saved the school from suffering any actual harm. The situation left no mark upon the character or the spirit of the boys and girls. That was the only thing that mattered very much.

A Loveless Daughter

DEAR MISS GALE:

I have been reading your advice in the Lovelorn for quite a while, and think it excellent. I do not approve of the way the girls of the younger generation smoke, drink and pet. I think it's a shame. If I were one of those girls I wouldn't have the nerve to show my face. Miss Gale, I never went out with a fellow. I never went to any of the dances held at our country halls, and I take in a movie about twice a year. Miss Gale, most of the girls of my town have fellows. All my friends are these good-for-nothings of the fast set. Now, Miss Gale, I want to tell you my trouble. I've had a step-mother for eight years, and I stood it that long. Not many girls would stay under a step-mother's claw so long. I don't work any place, so I did all the work at home. The other night my father said that it's about time I was getting out to work. Miss Gale, although I am only 16, he thinks he has no right to support me, that I should go out. Now, I think all good girls shouldn't leave home, and I hate the idea of running away. But he and my step-mother keep pushing me out with words. Would you advise me to leave, as I cannot get work anywhere.

A LOVELESS DAUGHTER.

Aren't you going to school, my dear? You are too young to have completed your education, you know. If you have stopped school, though, and your parents are poor, don't you think it would be better for you to go to work outside the home rather than be there all day and be unhappy with your step-mother? There are lots of openings for girls. Don't leave home by any means, however.

Broken-hearted Sal

DEAR MISS GALE:

Have been a constant reader of your column for quite a while and agree with you on all three subjects. Am going to explain my troubles to you, so you can advise me. Am a girl just going out of my teens; am considered fairly good looking and very popular with both sexes. Now, Miss Gale, I am in love with a fellow three years older than myself; have been going out with him for five months steady. The last time he was up he insisted upon petting and since I don't approve of it I refused. He got peeved and said he would not be up again. As much as I cared for him, I held my place and have not seen him since. Do you think I did right? Do you think he cares? I can't forget him and feel as though I'll never meet anybody I'll care for better.

BROKEN-HEARTED SAL.

You were quite right in your stand, my dear. If he really likes you he will come back, liking and respecting you more than he did before.

KEEP LOOKING YOUNG

The secret of keeping young is to feel young—to do this you must watch your liver and bowels—there's no need of having a sallow complexion—dark rings under your eyes—pimples—a bilious look in your face—dull eyes with no sparkle. Your doctor will tell you ninety per cent of all sickness comes from inactive bowels and liver.

Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, perfected a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil as a substitute for calomel to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are gentle in their action, yet always effective. They bring about that natural buoyancy which all should enjoy by toning up the liver and clearing the system of impurities.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are known by their olive color. 15c, 30c and 60c.

Coolidge Smiles on Will Rogers' Impersonation

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—I found on my arrival in Washington that some people had censored me severely for leaving the impression that Mr. Coolidge was on the radio. Well, the idea that any one could imagine it was him uttering the nonsense that I was uttering—well, it struck me that it would be an insult to anyone's sense of humor to announce that I was not him. So I wrote Mr. Coolidge a note explaining and received from him a two-page letter within 30 minutes, written all in his own long hand, saying "that he had been told of it but knew that anything that I did was done in good-natured amusement and to not give it a moment's worry, and also thanked me for my kind references to him on various occasions of which he had heard."

WILL ROGERS

I knew my man before I joked about him. It's as I have often said: You can always joke good-naturedly a big man, but be sure he is a big man before you joke about him. What I did over the radio on Mr. Coolidge I did an entire year on my tour of every state last season, and didn't offend good taste then.

I want to here publicly thank Mr. Coolidge for that lovely letter. For I am personally very fond of him. With an election coming on, I know of no man connected with either party who I have ever had the pleasure of meeting, who I don't have a great regard for. When there is no malice in your heart there can be none shown in your homes. But between you and I there is a lot of people in this country who should never be so absent-minded as to refer to their sense of humor.

Yours,
WILL ROGERS.

Winter Weather in Minnesota Decides "Lindy" to Go South—He Flies Away

A minor accident—he nosed into a swamp in Minnesota—led to a report of Lindbergh's death, as described in "We" yesterday. Receiving a new propeller and making other small repairs, "Lindy" joined his father who was campaigning for a seat in Congress. He won his father to aviation and they flew together. On a barnstorming trip following the campaign, Lindbergh's mother accompanied him and made many flights. Then he made application for appointment as an army flying cadet. Ordered to report for examination, "Lindy" sold his Jenny.

He Wants to Fly Better Planes

By COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

CHAPTER VII.

SOME weeks I barely made expenses, and on others I carried passengers all week long at five dollars each. On the whole I was able to make a fair profit in addition to meeting expenses and depreciation.

One evening while I was waiting for chance passengers at a field in Southern Minnesota, a car drove up with several young fellows in it, one of whom was a graduate of the Army Air Service Training Schools. He asked me why I did not apply for enlistment as a cadet at Brooks Field and explained that by writing to the Chief of Air Service at the War Department in Washington I could get enrollment blanks and full information on the course and its requirements.

I had always wanted to fly modern and powerful planes. Ever since I had watched a group of 14 De Havilands with their 400-horsepower Liberty motors come into the field at Lincoln in my flying school days, I had longed to fly one of them. The Army offered the only opportunity, for there were no Liberty engines flying around barnstorming. Consequently at the hotel that night I wrote my letter to the Chief of Air Service, and a few days later when I received my next mail forwarded from Minneapolis, a letter from Washington with the enrollment blanks was included. The letter informed me that a candidate must be between 20 and 27 years of age inclusive, unmarried, of good physical condition, and must have a high school education or its equivalent.

In completed and returned the forms, and a short time later received another message authorizing me to appear before an examining board at Chanute Field, Rantoul, Ill., in January, 1924.

Not a Cut-Rate Pilot

Toward the end of September I began to work south. Cold weather was coming on in Minnesota and most people did not enjoy flying in an open cockpit in winter.

I barnstormed over into Wisconsin, but found that some one had been carrying passengers for half price there. I had always conformed to the rule in use among most pilots at that time, of giving a good ride for $5, but not carrying anyone for less. So I left Southern Wisconsin and turned toward Illinois. After taking off I decided to take in the international air races at St. Louis, which were then in progress; so instead of sizing up each town I passed over for its passenger possibilities, I flew toward St. Louis until the gasoline ran low, then landed, took on a fresh supply from a passing gas truck and pressed on to Carlinville, Ill. There I picked up more fuel and a $25 passenger for St. Louis.

Bound to Be a Cadet

As we neared Lambert Field, where the races were being held, we passed over the race course while the bombers' contest was in progress. I landed on a hill east of Lambert in order to keep out of the way of the races, and waited until evening before hopping over and staking my ship down at the end of one of the long rows of civilian planes.

A large number of my old friends were attending the races and soon after landing I met Bud Gurney, who, together with one of the flying students at Lincoln, had managed to get to the races without buying a Pullman ticket. He had brought his chute with him and was entered in the parachute spot landing contest, in which he was to be the last attraction of the meet by staging a double drop.

In the evening after the races were over for the day, I carried a few passengers and looked over the different types of planes. I would have given the summer's barnstorming profits gladly in return for authority to fly some of the newer types, and I determined to let nothing interfere with my chance of being appointed a Flying Cadet in the army. This appeared to be my only opportunity to fly planes which would roar up into the sky when they were pointed in that direction, instead of having to be wished up over low trees at the end of a landing field.

When I went to St. Louis it was with the expectation of pressing on still farther South when the races were over, but with Bud's assistance I sold my Jenny to his friend, flying instruction included. Marvin Northrop, who had flown a Standard down from Minneapolis, had sold his ship in St. Louis also; together with a course in flying. Since it was necessary for him to return home immediately I agreed to instruct his student while mine was learning on the Jenny.

In "Crowded" Air

I had promised to carry Bud for his last jump, and towards evening on the final day of the races he packed his two chutes and tied them together with the only rope he could find. It was rather old, but we decided that it would hold and if it did not the only consequence would be a little longer fall before the second chute opened.

I coaxed the old Jenny up to 1,700 feet and as we passed to the windward of the field Bud cut loose. The first chute opened at once, but in opening the strain on the old rope was too great and it snapped, releasing the second chuté, which fell another 200 feet before opening.

Planes were circling all around the parachute and flying in every direction without apparent regard for one another. The air was kept in constant motion by their propellers, and the chute swung from side to side in the rough currents, with the result that Bud broke an arm as he landed among the crowd on the side of a ditch. This was the only accident in which any one was injured during the entire meet.

For the next few weeks I instructed my two students and made a short barnstorming tour through Illinois.

SECOND NEWS SECTION THE SUN-TELEGRAPH SPORTS FEATURES

SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1928

BROADCAST SIGHT SUCCESSFULLY

By International News Service

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Jan. 14.—Radio television for the public will be a reality within five years, it was predicted today following the first successful demonstration of television broadcasting here.

The possibility that homes throughout the world may soon be connected by sight, as they have already been connected by voice through the radio, was demonstrated in the radio laboratories of the General Electric Company. More than twenty persons in a darkened room of the laboratory and other groups in three homes in different parts of the city saw a miniature moving picture of the radio announcer in another room of the laboratory.

The picture and voice of a smiling young woman were received simultaneously on the first home televisor, or picture receiving machine, ever built. The observers clearly saw the smoke of her cigaret and the flash of her teeth.

The possibilities of television were demonstrated last year in an experiment made by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. This latest performance, according to the inventors of the machinery, was the first broadcasting and reception by means of instruments which within a few years may be installed in homes that now possess loud speakers.

The new apparatus through which, it was predicted, radio fans may some day look at the features and take in the gestures as well as hear the voice of speakers miles away, was developed by Dr. E. F. W. Alexanderson, consulting engineer of the Radio Corporation of America and the General Electric Company, and his assistants in the laboratory here.

The set used in the demonstration was of simple construction, not unlike an ordinary phonograph cabinet in size and exterior appearance. In the demonstration the transmission of the moving object was made on 37.8 meters wave length while the voice was simultaneously sent through the air on 379.5 meters.

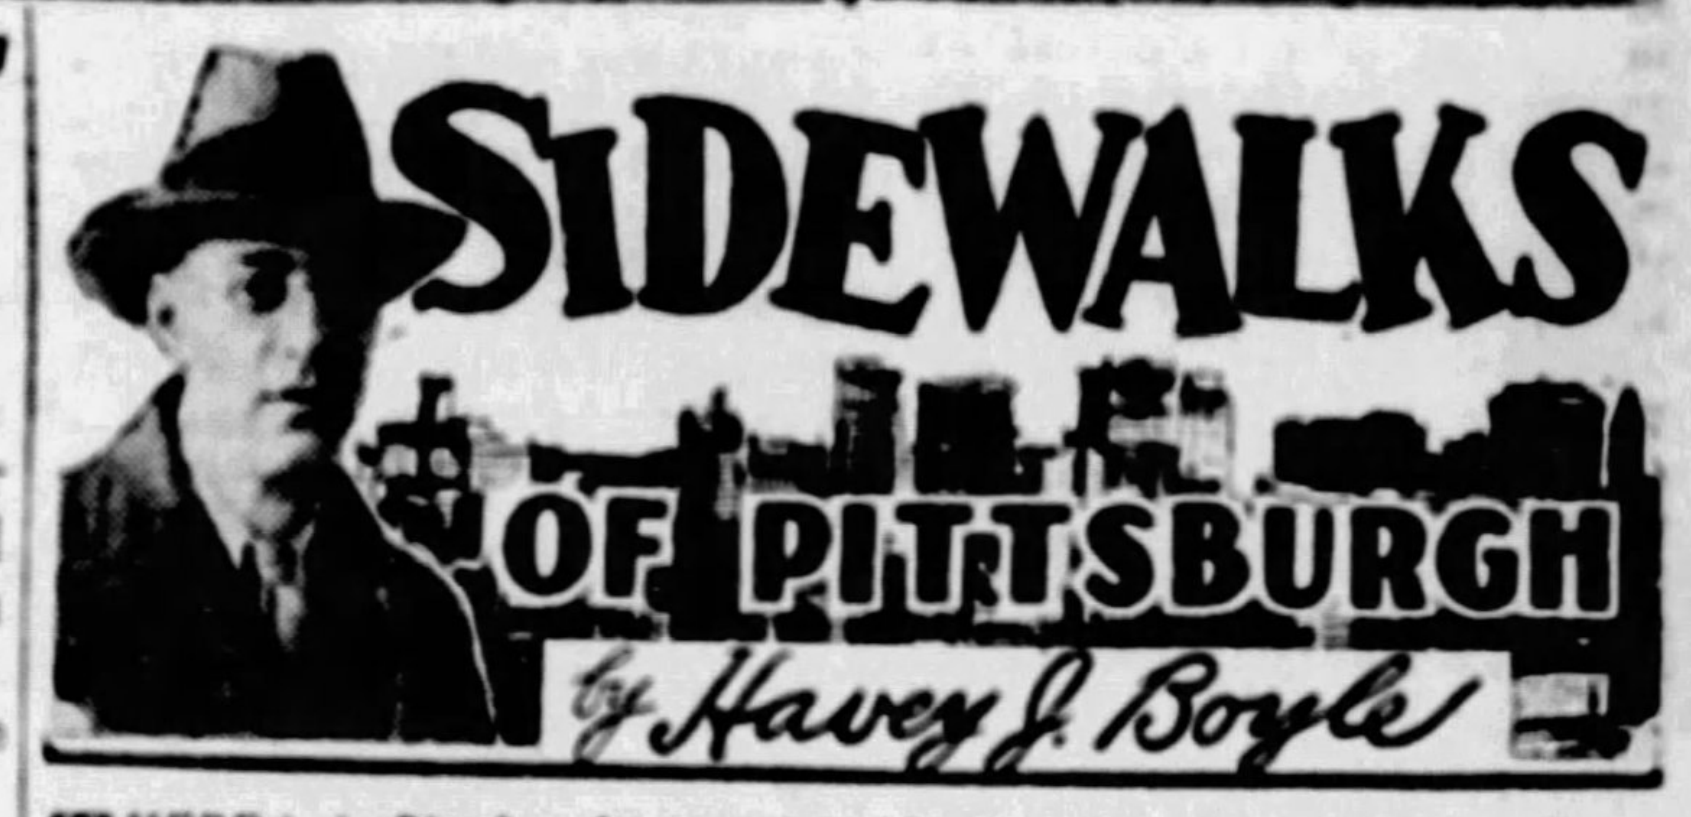
The receiever used by Dr. Alexanderson, it was explained, differs from the ordinary short wave receiver in that it converts the electro-magnetic wave into light instead of sound and the light becomes an image corresponding in movement to the action of the person at the transmitting end.

A neon gas filled lamp is substituted for the loud speaker and the amplified current is delieverd to the lamp, which responds to the intensities of the current and gives fluctuations of the light intensity just as a diaphragm of a loud speaker reproduces pulsations of the air waves.

Light beams trace the picture on a revolving disc and magnifying lenses enlarge the picture in an aperture in front of the cabinet.

EVANGELISTIC DRIVE BREAKS ALL RECORDS

The Pittsburgh district broke all records in the United States for the greatest results of an evangelistic campaign in obtaining the promises of 6,469 persons to become church members. The one-week visitation campaign conducted by more than 200 churches under the direction of the Pittsburgh Council of Churches closed last night with a meeting in the Second Presbyterian Church, Eighth street, which was attended by 700 persons. Dr. A. Earl Kenahan of Boston directed the drive.



THERE is in Pittsburgh a special police grudge against slot machines, devices into which suckers put quarters in the hope of getting out more than they put in. Several racketeers have become immensely wealthy by renting out these machines to the stores and whispering palaces, as speakeasies have come to be called. To operate slot machines, often, is far more hazardous than selling whisky and beer. So hazardous, in fact, that a great many of the drinking booths have abandoned them.

The strange part of the slot machine racket is that nearly every player knows he is a sucker—that he cannot possibly beat the machine—but he keeps on playing. Some of the machines have adjustments on them, by which the system of pay to the customer can be regulated.

Some of the boys who operate the filling stations held off for a long time before installing the slot machines and acquiesced only because many of the customers importuned them to get them. The boys who manufacture the machines go by that well-known slogan: "Never give a sucker an even break," or its brother slogan, "It's only the sap that gives the sucker an even break."

IN the Sheridan Square Theater recently there was an act, during which a performer led the audience in singing a popular ballad. The words were flashed on the screen. One of the best known figures in the local music field was among those noticed singing the ballad.

Getting the audience to sing is not new. It was all the rage in the first stages of the nickleodeon. Sometime after one observed flickering on the screen the words: "Ladies, please remove their hats," and "One minute, please, while we change reels," a throaty tenor would come out and sing a popular song. There would be colored slides showing a girl holding a fellow's hat while the fellow in question looked at the girl, considerably moon-struck, and sometimes over this picture would be flashed the words of the chorus, with the entire audience joining in.

A Pittsburgh conductor cultivated canary birds for a long time until his wife told him he would have to give them up—she couldn't stand the noise they made around the premises.

THERE was one time a bird store near Pride street. The proprietor put seven birds in a separate room because they were suffering from asthma. They flew out an open window and into homes of neighbors who, instead of returning the birds, kept them.

The next day these neighbors went to the bird store and as innocently as possible asked to look at some bird cages.

The proprietor made seven sales of bird cages that day. Later on the seven customers came back and asked to price canaries, since the asthmatic birds they had failed to return, died and left the customers with empty bird cages on their hands. The proprietor then sold seven canaries. All in all, the escape of the asthmatic birds proved to be good business for the proprietor.

MOST of the colored troupers who come to Pittsburgh stop at Frank Sutton's hotel in Wylie avenue. The register of Sutton's contains such names as Williams and Walker, Jack Johnson, Sissle and Blake, and many other famous colored people, who came through here in their days of struggling as well as in their days of fame. Moran and Mack, the two Black Crows, here recently, were frequent visitors at Sutton's. Sutton can spin many yarns about the incomparable Bert Williams.

Pittsburgh's colored theater is the Elmore, where without much heralding the future Walkers and Williams and Dodsons and Millses do their stuff.

Lily Receives a Wedding Present From the Ertz Girl

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

LILLY LEXINGTON, spoiled daughter of the CYRUS LEXINGTONS, is engaged to marry STALEY DRUMMOND, a rich bachelor much older than herself. She is fond of him, but realizes she does not really love him the day after she accepts him, when she becomes instantly and violently infatuated with a taxicab driver whom she sees down town when she goes to meet her chum, SUE CAIN. Forgetting all about Sue, she jumps into his cab and he drives her home. She learns that his name is PAT FRANCE and that he owns his own cab in a company headed by his friend, ROY JETTERSON. He tells her that he is going to sell it to finance a piston ring that he has invented, and he and his cab vanish from the streets. Lily misses him terribly, and decides she cares too much for him to marry Staley Drummond. But Mrs. Lexington announces the engagement, and the date of the wedding is set for June tenth. Then, on May tenth, Mrs. Lexington hires a new chauffeur, and it is Pat France. Lily tells her mother how much she cares for Pat, and Mrs. Lexington humiliates him so that he leaves the house. Lily leaves with him, and the next day she marries him. Lily asked to clerk in the Frances' grocery, decides to leave Pat. They make up and she tries to make the best of her position. Lily tries to get her clothes from home. She is invited to a party at the Jetterson's home and sees Elizabeth Ertz.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

HER prettiness was the gentle kind that you have to look for twice to see at all—a prettiness that came from Elizabeth's wide, soft eyes and the shape of her gentle mouth. She looked as if she were as good as gold.

"You can just see that she never did a mean thing in her life," Lily said to herself, playing a low card when she should have played a high one. "And that's the meanest thing about her! She's a goody-goody."

But whether Elizabeth was a goody-goody or not, she was very popular with the women who were playing cards.

Pat's sister, Sarah, jumped up the minute she saw her and hurried to her and kissed her on both cheeks.

"You know Elizabeth, don't you?" she asked Lily, who was sitting quietly in her chair while all the other guests gathered around the girl in the doorway.

"I'm sorry—I haven't," Lily answered, and found herself shaking hands with the girl Pat had almost married, a moment later.

"I've heard so many nice things about you—from Pat," Elizabeth said to her in the friendliest way imaginable. The corners of her lips went up in a smile.

But Lily did not smile at her. "How d'you do?" she asked, indifferently, barely touching the outstretched hand with her pointed fingers. She sat down again in her chair.

"I came to help Sadye with the dishes," Elizabeth said to Sarah. "And then I thought if you wanted me to, I'd go over to your house with you. I met Pat the other day and he said you needed some rest, so if you need me for a night or two I'll be glad to stay. I just came off a case, but it wasn't very hard."

"Now, isn't that lovely of her—to come and help out?" Sarah asked Lily a moment later, when Elizabeth vanished up the stairs to look after the babies who were howling in Sadye's room. "She knows my children have had the measles and I haven't been able to get out. So she offers to come over to the house for a day or two. Who else would think of doing such a nice thing?"

"Well, she gets her board and room free, doesn't she, when she's at your house?" asked Lily, who refused to see anything good in the little nurse. "I think she's pretty clever, that's what I think!"

She did not sit down at the card table again, but ran upstairs for her coat. . . . It was late, and she was bored to tears with the party, anyway. All these women making a fuss over a silly little nurse, as if she actually were somebody!

"They didn't make any fuss over ME!" she said to herself, pushing open the door of Sadye's cool, pretty guest room, with its white furniture and flowered cretonne curtains and cushions.

"The Ertz" was standing beside the dresser. She had a square, white tissue-paper package in her hands, and she was straightening a big bow of white satin ribbon on it.

She flushed up as Lily came into the room, and held the package out to her. "I was just going to bring this down to you," she said. "It's a wedding present for you and Pat. "Then without another word or look she went stiffly out of the room to the noisy babies. Almost at once there was miraculous silence.

On the way home Lily opened the package and looked at the gift. It was a colored etching—a picture of a Paris book-stall above the Seine River.

Lily knew practically nothing about art, but she saw that it was a good picture—full of sunlight and color.

"Well, I'm not going to have that thing around all my natural life, to remind Pat of her!" she thought, and popped it down into a sewer that she happened to be passing, white ribbon and all.

"Where would I put it anyway?" she asked herself, disconsolately. "I haven't any home, and it doesn't look as if I ever am going to have one!"

She was most unhappy, going along the sidewalks in the spring twilight. Her high heels cut into her feet like knives and she was limping by the time she turned in at the gate of the little brown-shuttered house.

"I suppose we'll have to live here in this dump for years and years on top of years," she went on thinking, as she opened the door and went into the kitchen.

Pat's mother was standing beside the table, making biscuits. She looked up with her quick, cheerful smile. "Have a good time, dearie?" she asked.

Lily shook her head. "I should say I didn't," she answered with perfect truthfulness. "It was the most terrible party I ever went to in my life. All the women brought their brats along, and that fat Sadye waited on table, and a nurse came in at the end of the afternoon talking about a case she had been on."

"That must have been Elizabeth Ertz," Pat's mother began mildly. But Lily cut her off short.

"It was," she said. "But for heaven's sake, let's not talk about her! All I've been hearing this afternoon is how wonderful she is. . . . My stars! If she's so wonderful, why didn't Pat marry her?"

"Don't ask me. I never could understand men folks," Mrs. France said, shaking her head. "Pat's going to work on his piston ring down at the garage tonight. . . . Would you like to walk down there with his lunch?"

She waved her hand toward a large package wrapped in brown paper that stood on the kitchen table. Lily shook her head.

"I couldn't walk that far on a bet," she sighed. "My feet are just killing me. . . . Let Florence take it when she comes."

"She's staying down town for supper," said Pat's mother. "I'll run down with it if you'll watch these biscuits for me. . . . I hate Pat to miss his regular meal time."

"All right. I'll watch them," the girl promised. "I won't forget them, don't worry."

But she did forget them. She forgot all about them two minutes after Mrs. France left the house with the package tucked into her shopping bag.

She went upstairs, wrapped in the gloomist kind of thoughts about herself and Pat—about her life with Pat.

He had promised her that some day he would be as "well fixed" as the Jettersons were, if his ring sold when it was put on the market.

"But what does that mean?" Lily asked herself, thinking of the maidless house, the 10-cent store candles on the lunch table, and the women who had to bring their offsprings with them to a card party or stay at home.

"And that's what I'm facing! That's the very best I'll get if I stick to Pat—pretty slim pickings," she told her bright image in the glass as she slipped out of her party dress and into a pink bungalow apron that Mrs. France had made for her.

She started down the stairs, wondering how long she would have to stay on here in the little house. Everybody in it was good to her, and they were pleasant people to live with.

"But it's not your own home," she thought, remembering how she and Pat had not even been able to quarrel there without the whole family knowing about it. . . . There was something in having a house to yourself, even if you just wanted it to be able to row in privacy.

"Pat had no business to marry me until he had a home to take me to," she went on thinking, forgetting completely that she had practically begged Pat to marry her—forgetting that she had told him she didn't mind being poor as Job's turkey if only she were his wife!

On the hall table was a magazine that had come that afternoon. She picked it up and carried it into the little parlor. There she settled herself comfortably on the couch with all the cushions on it piled around her.

She was halfway through a love story of the Sahara desert when the smell of burning biscuits brought her back to her own world.

"Heavens to Hannah!" she cried, and flew to the kitchen. Clouds of smoke were pouring from the oven, and when she pulled out the pan of biscuits they were burned to a cinder. Somehow or other, they had caught on fire.

She was standing gazing at them helplessly when the front door opened and closed. Pat's mother came into the kitchen, wiping her eyes with her handkerchief as she came.

"Good gracious! The house is full of smoke. What's happened out here?" she asked. Then she saw the pan of charcoal that once had been beautiful white biscuit dough.

"You forgot them!" she said curtly to Lily. "You forgot those biscuits."

"I did. I never thought of them again, after you left," Lily groaned. "I'm just as sorry as I can be—"

"'Sorry' won't bring them back in time for supper," Mrs. France said, in that same brisk, quick way. "What were you thinking of—to forget them?"

She pushed back her glasses and peered at Lily as if she were trying to discover what odd kind of woman she was. "I don't know how you're ever going to make a poor man's wife, if you don't wake up pretty soon!" she remarked, thoughtfully. "I thought I could teach you some things while you were here. But I can't—"

"No, because I'm not going to be here long enough for you to teach me anything!" Lily cut in, quickly and angrily. "I certainly am not going to spend another night under this roof, so get that firmly fixed in your mind!" She banged the kitchen door shut with such violence that it shook the house, and rushed up to her room to pack her things.

Twenty minutes later she appeared to Pat, who was at work on the piston ring in a room behind the garage. He was in his shirt sleeves, bending over a tiny object that he held under a light beside the rough table where he had his materials.

CHAPTER XXIX.

LILY looked with puzzled eyes at the bits of metal in Pat's grease-stained fingers.

"What's that?" she asked. "The famous piston ring?"

He nodded, smiling at the color and loveliness of her as she stood, looking as bright as a sunbeam, against the dingy wall of the garage.

"That's what it is, Baby! The piston ring that's going to make us all rich!" he said, twisting it in his hand so that it glittered in the circle of light from the green-shaded lamp that hung above the table.

"Well, I hope it will make us rich, and do it in a hurry, too," she said, "because we're going to need money, Boy, starting tonight! I've had a rumpus with your mother and we're leaving the house. . . . In fact, I've left it!" She swung herself up on the table and opened her cigaret case. It was empty.

She snapped it shut again, and put out her hand for one of Pat's that were in a paper package on the table. Instantly he covered it with his own that was stained with oil and grease.

"Don't smoke, please," he said. "If you have to do it, do it when I'm not around and can't see you. . . . Maybe I'm old-fashioned, but—"

"There are no 'buts' about it! You ARE old-fashioned," his wife interrupted him, pushing his hand away and picking up a cigaret. She struck a match, and her eyes met his calmly and defiantly above the yellow flame.

Eleanor Lincoln Exhibits Her Complete Mastery of the Stranger's Wolfhound

ELEANOR LINCOLN wasted no time in carrying out her announced intention of taking the wolfhound, Fedor, to the car of the young man in whose charge he had been. She sprang lightly to the ground before either Noel Veritzen or young Jackson could assist her, and the dog rose expectantly as she turned back to him and put her hand fearlessly upon his collar.

"Is that safe?" Mary breathed anxiously, but I did not echo the query even mentally. I was convinced that the magnificent wolfhound had been the personal property of the girl at whom he was gazing adoringly. To me, the attempted snapping of the dog at the summoning hand of the young man who called himself "George Logan Jackson," and the absolute control over the animal which Miss Lincoln had evinced were sufficient proof of her ownership.

"Perfectly safe," Miss Lincoln answered, and I wondered if Mary caught the patronizing inflection in her tone, one which subtly relegated my husband's young niece to the ranks of timorous school girls.

"I never had a dog snap at me in my life," the young mistress of The Larches went on, and I knew, somehow that she spoke only the truth. "And I never saw one which would not obey me whether I owned it or not."

I found it harder to believe this embroidering of her first assertion. But the behavior of the dog, Fedor, certainly bore out her assertion. As docilely as a perfectly trained house-dog he sprang down from the car and with only a light touch of her hand upon the leash which she had picked up he followed her across the platform to the car where the automobile dealer patiently awaited his customer.

With a muttered exclamation, the words of which I could not catch, young Jackson followed her, not forgetting, however, to bow a courteous farewell to us. As he caught up to her I found myself watching for something which I was sure I would see, and I was not disappointed. Miss Lincoln dropped her purse, lightly held in her hand, and its contents were scattered on the ground. There was no one within earshot of them, and as young Jackson hurriedly bent to recover the things strewn on the ground, there was ample opportunity for the exchange of the words for which I was sure my young neighbor had planned.

The next minute saw them at the door of the new car which evidently was soon to be the property of young Jackson. We three watching, saw Miss Lincoln bend to the dog and whisper something to him. Then with a slight, perfunctory bow she walked toward us.

Until she left the other car not one of us watching her uttered a word. It was as if we were watching a scene in a play and feared to disturb the actors by comment. But when she left the dog behind and turned toward us there was an audible catching of breath from all of us. Then Mary laughed gleefully.

"Well, Auntie Madge," she said, "you can't say we neglected to provide entertainment for your homecoming. That was as good a vaudeville act as I ever witnessed."

Her mirth lifted the tension under which I unconsciously had been.

"I agree with you, Mary," I said smiling.

But Noel Veritzen spoke no word, and his eyes kept themselves fixed in glowering resentment upon the man who had dared to look admiringly at Mary Harrison.

Reserve Warning May Come; Ford Calm; Youth Scores

By B. C. FORBES

I LEARN that some Federal Reserve bank people frown upon the unprecedented expansion in broker's loans and that these people favor issuing a warning against a continuance of the inflationary movement.

Some go so far as to advocate raising the 3½ per cent rediscount rate. Others regard so drastic a step as not called for thus far, but are agreeable that a word of caution be issued.

Events during the next few weeks will determine just what action, if any, Federal reserve authorities will take. Should loans contract, well and good. Should expansion continue, then expect either an official warning or an advance in the rediscount rate.

"I NEVER like to see my loans go above $10,000,000," the head of one Stock Exchange house told me this week, "but they have gone up to $17,000,000. I have been turning down orders right and left to buy stocks on margin. I don't care to carry the responsibility of so many millions of loans after so long-continued a bull market. I'm scared of the market myself and I simply won't go on borrowing more and more money.

"You will find other houses—some of them very much bigger than ours—that also have reached their borrowing limits and won't carry any additional lines of stock."

I hear that certain large banks are now going over their loans with a view to making doubly sure that they will not suffer even should the whole market sustain a sudden, drastic relapse. The highest executives are taking a hand in this precautionary process. More attention is paid to net earnings and intrinsic values than to boomed quotations.

IN RESPONSIBLE financial circles President Coolidge's superficial comment on loan expansion—to the effect that, while he did not pretend to be an authority, he didn't see any reason for uneasiness—is looked upon as most unfortunate, ill-advised and wholly uncalled for. This attitude is taken notwithstanding frank acknowledgement that the government is interested in maintaining confidence in easy money prospects because of its important refunding operations.

"The less Washington projects itself into any phase of the money market or banking, the better from every point of view," declares responsible financial judgment.

OWEN D. YOUNG'S declaration that his company, General Electric, hasn't the slightest objection to a Congressional investigation into the utility industry, provided it "be specific and non-political and have for its object fair and full disclosure of the facts," typifies the attitude of present-day progressive American business leaders. All they ask is fair play. The electric light and power industry claims that it has given customers and the public at large fair play, and it feels that it, in turn, is entitled to fair play at the hands of politicians.

Nothing has developed, nothing is within sight, to justify holders of utility securities becoming acutely alarmed. Personally, I know no class of modern business leaders who take a fairer, broader view than the great majority of the brainy men who have contributed so much to place the United States in the vanguard as an industrial nation capable of holding its own against the competition of the rest of the world. Therefore, I for one do not believe any widespread crookedness will be unearthed.

HENRY FORD didn't even know that John N. Willys and W. C. Durant had named prices as low as his own! He spends very little time in keeping posted on the news of the day.

SCORE one more for youth! A 36-year-old has just been elected president of one of America's two-billion-dollar banks, the Chase National of New York. It became very apparent before young Robert L. Clarkson reached thirty that he was striding rapidly towards this high position. Albert H. Wiggin, head of the bank, realized that he had made a rich "find." And so brainy had Clarkson proved that even the ablest of the men in the bank recognized that he was entitled to top rank.

Like Harold Stanley, the latest admission to the firm of J. P. Morgan & Company, Clarkson developed extraordinary skill in analyzing securities and in arranging the right kind of new financing. Al Wiggin should now be able to slacken somewhat the strenuous pace he has been leading since the collapse of the post-war boom laid troubles at the doors of so many banks.

The president of America's other billion dollar bank—it is far more than a billion-and-a-half dollar bank—Charles E. Mitchell, is only fifty.

BUSINESS sentiment—as actually felt—has become somewhat more cheerful.

Company May Open Old Property

The short, week-end session on the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange witnessed another spirited advance in the shares of the Carnegie Metals Company with the stock selling up to a new high record on a rush of buying orders at the opening of the market.

Expansion of trading in the issue yesterday augured some special development, but the street was without definite information as to the reasons behind the current advance. There was a rumor that the company plans to reopen its property at Cananea, Mexico, but no official confirmation of this intention was forthcoming. The Cananea property was one of the original holdings of the Carnegie Lead and Zinc Company, predecessor of Carnegie Metals. It was abandoned some time ago and the company concentrated its activities on two silver properties about 200 miles distant from the Cananea mine.

Recent discovery of ores by the Greene Cananea Copper Company in the area in which Carnegie's holdings are located are said to have convinced the officials of the latter that deeper operations on the Carnegie property would probably prove successful in uncovering desirable pay ore.

Aside from the demonstration in Carnegie Metals, the market was a rather dull affair with the price trend indefinite. Standard Sanitary moved up a point in response to announcement that stockholders had approved the three-for-one split-up, and United Engineering sagged off a point when offerings of a few shares disclosed an absence of demand around the previous selling price.

Just as the market closed some profit-taking made its appearance in Carnegie Metals with the result that the stock dropped back about a point from the early high. Fair support was in evidence, however, and the selling failed to break the market to any extent.

STOCKS REACT AFTER EARLY ADVANCE

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—(AP.)—Stock prices turned reactionary today after an early period of strength. The reaction was not associated with any development in the day's news, but probably represented a combination of week-end profit-taking and "bear" selling inspired by the general uneasiness over the credit situation as it applies to stock market conditions.

Greene Cananea Copper broke 6 points, Case Threshing Machine 4½, and a number of other pool specialties sold down 2 points or more, including International Nickel, Warren Brothers, Borden and Snider Packing preferred. U. S. Steel common and General Motors sold off about a point and Radio canceled its initial gain of 1⅝.

The closing was heavy. Total sales approximated 1,000,000 shares.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—The cotton market opened steady today at a decline of 5 to 10 points and soon showed net losses of 10 to 13 points under liquidation and local selling promoted by relatively easy Liverpool cables and further reports of curtailment in the production of cotton goods.

March sold off to 18.80c and May to 18.91c, but offerings were absorbed by trade buying at these figures and the market rallied a few points from the lowest by the end of the first hour.

Private cables said price fixing and covering had absorbed hedge selling and liquidation in Liverpool.

The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance was estimated at 131,000 bales, against 213,000 last year.

Futures closed steady, 7@12c lower. January, 18.83c; March, 18.86@18.88c; May, 18.96@18.97c; July, 18.02c; October, 18.11@18.12c. Spot quiet, middling, 19.35c.

CHICAGO BOARD

CHICAGO, Jan. 14.—Forecasts of a cold wave led to early higher prices today for wheat. General absence of snow protection over domestic winter wheat territory caused apprehension as to possible crop damage. Starting at ⅛c to ⅝@⅜c advance, wheat subsequently scored further gains. Corn and oats were also firmer, corn opening at ⅛c to ⅜c up and later holding near to the initial range. Provisions tended to sag.

With temperatures expected to fall to 10 above zero by Monday and with practically no shield anywhere for domestic wheat, speculative buying of wheat futures deliveries here increased to a considerable extent today. At times offerings diminished to a corresponding degree and for the same reason. Storm conditions in Canada tended also to lift wheat prices.

Increasing export demand for corn acted to some degree in the corn market today as a counter-balance against a cold wave prediction. New York advices said corn export business there this morning was the best yet this season. On the other hand, low temperatures looked for over the corn belt were talked of as likely to facilitate the crop movement from rural sources.

ALFRED BOBBIN, WHO TOLD ME, GOT HIS INFORMATION DIRECT FROM THE MAN WHO SAW THE TWO LAWYERS ARRIVE FROM MEXICO WITH THE DOUGH THAT SHOULD HAVE GONE TO POOR HERMAN LAMB. IMAGINE HIM BEING PUSHED OUT OF THE PICTURE JUST BEFORE HE INHERITED $200,000!
POOR HERMAN! HE ALWAYS FELT HE WOULD INHERIT DOUGH. IF HE WAS HERE NOW HIS FIRST THOUGHT WOULD BE TO THROW A REAL PARTY FOR HIS FRIENDS. HE WAS A PRINCE!
YESSIR! HERMAN LAMB INHERITED $500,000. FOUR LAWYERS ARE IN TOWN WITH HALF THE MONEY IN GOLD. I JUST TALKED TO ED FLUKE. HE KNOWS THE PARTY WHO TALKED WITH THE LAWYERS.
$500,000 IN GOLD! I SUPPOSE THERE'S AN ESTATE, TOO! THERE ALWAYS IS! I'M GOING NEXTDOOR A MOMENT.
YES $1,000,000 IN PERUVIAN GOLD! HERBERT TALKED WITH THE LAWYERS AND SAW THE MONEY. THERE'S A BIG PLANTATION, TOO. THE LAWYERS WERE STUNNED WHEN HERBERT TOLD THEM HERMAN LAMB WAS NO MORE.
$1,000,000! IMAGINE!
THE PLANTATION MUST BE WORTH ANOTHER MILLION OR SO TOO.

MR. FRISBY WILL STRUM NATION'S HEARTSTRINGS

Upon the request of Jack Dempsey, Mr. Frisby has discontinued his practice of autographing photos like the above to send to women admirers. "It was just a joke," says Frisby, nervously.

By Mister Frisby
Congressman-at-Large

WASHINGTON.—It is a pleasure to announce that I have been appointed to the Committee on Publication of Temperance Poetry in the Congressional Record. This very important appointment came to me as a complete surprise, as Speaker Longworth and I hardly know each other.

Perhaps I was singled out for this honor as a result of my dramatic reading of the following poem on the floor yesterday

I saw a man at early dawn
Stand in a grog saloon.
His eyes were sunk and his lips
were parched,
But that's the drunkard's doom.
A little boy stood by his side,
And falteringly he said:
"O, father Mother's sick at home,
And sister cries for bread,
And sister cries for bread."
The drunkard staggered to the bar,
As he'd ofttimes done before,
And to the landlord pleading
said:
"Oh, give me one glass more."
The host complied with his request
And filled the tempting bowl.
He drank while wife and children starved,
He ruined his poor soul.
He ruined his poor soul.

ON "BEAUTY PROBLEMS"

SOME girls possess BEAUTY
And live EASILY on it,
And yet look most
UNHAPPY. Why?
Others have BRAINS, and
Live by the SWEAT of their
Brow. These often do not Look HAPPY, either.
STRANGE!
A few girls have BEAUTY
and
Brains, CHARM and dashing
Personality, and they just Don't know WHERE they are
Or what TO DO about it.
MARRIAGE, to them, seems
CRAMPED. Devotion of one
Man, of course, looks SMALL
Beside love of SEVERAL. A
CAREER is good, but entails
Many self-sacrifices, while
SOCIAL life, though it could Not SATISFY, offers many
DIVERSIONS. Girls like this
Often MIGRATE to the stage
And sometimes make good
ACTRESSES. Others—
Well! very often they Marry HOMELY men.
BEAUTIFUL girls, of course,
Don't marry homely men for NOTHING.

BUGS BAER Says

IF THE Anglo-American Airship Company goes through with its promised threats we will soon have flying entanglements between Europe and America.

They are already building a 100-passenger cloud skimmer to operate between New York and London or reverse.

Which is another point for Pullman porters to strike about. It is bad enough to shine a pair of sox, assist fat salesmen into upper berths and caddy icewater all night to a profusely illustrated souse. It is tough to endeavor to brush polka dots off a permanent necktie and carry baggage which is liable to break and scald your feet.

ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER

But when they start zooming Pullmans over the Atlantic there is many a porter who will not want a run on the Main Line.

You cannot convince a porter that the gulf stream is a roadbed. No engineer would think of trying to cross the Hackensack River when the drawbridge is open. And think how many Hackensack Rivers there are in the ocean.

Ever since the railroads started trying to catch up to their schedules, the Atlantic has been considered the end of the line.

And when a porter comes to the end of the line he is through work for the day.

They may find 100 passengers who will loop the big lagoon. But when a porter travels he wants to see scenery.

We have talked with some of the boys and the decision seems to be a plurality. One of the lads on a very good run, which nets him millions in stock tips, but not a dime to play them, said, "I'm almost in the aviation now. That old gummer in section A expects me to fly for a jitney tip. Three more philanthropists like him and I've earned my wings."

"But they don't get me over the Atlantic pushing bundles up on clouds.. When I want to see the world I'll join the Navy. When I look out of the window I want to see a rooster, and not a sea gull."

"They say all of them airboats across the Atlantic will be expresses. They won't make no stops."

"But it will be just my good fortune to get a local."

A Soft Answer

Mrs. Sharpe (bitterly): "Don't you sometimes wish I'd married some other man?"

Sharpe: "No. I hold no grudge against any man, but I have wished a good many times you'd remained an old maid."

How It Sounded

Fond Mother: "My daughter's voice is really quite charming, but somehow it never seems to blend well with piano accompaniments."

Bored Young Man: "Why not try the bag-pipes?"

Sort of Reservation

Bessie: "I thought you said you' never wanted to see Jack's face again?"

Flossie: "But that allows me a pillion ride, doesn't it?"

Only Way Out

"You will never come to any good," roared the father. "I go on thrashing you, but it seems to make no difference. I really don't know what you'll be when you grow up."

"An orphan, I hope," muttered the unfortunate boy.

No More Delay Wanted On County Books Audit

Decision having been arrived at that an audit of the county's fiscal affairs may be made, there should be as little delay as possible in getting the work under way. If the county salary board is to have the say on the manner in which it shall be conducted, it should get together soon and make its decision. Equal promptitude is essential on the part of the county commissioners if it be the intention of the board to appropriate a lump sum for the examination of the county books.

The public is not so much concerned as to the procedure employed to put auditors to work as it is to see the work done. It feels that all concerned have been sufficiently cautious in "feeling their way" and that the time has come for action.

Let there be no further delay in this important matter.

Ban on Slot Machines Follows Alderman's Raid

Alderman William Scott "started something" when he cast a roving eye around his ward, the Tenth, focussed them on 19 slot gambling machines, and sent constables out to gather them in. His action was an implication that if slot machines were that numerous in the Tenth Ward, there must be a few in other wards, too.

Director Clark of the Public Safety Department has instructed his police to find them and confiscate them. They probably won't find very many now that Director Clark's order has been made public, but their disappearance will be as effective one way as another. The big thing will be to keep them out of operation.

Director Clark also wishes that evidence to prosecute owners of these machines be obtained and used in court. The public will indorse that attitude.

Heavy Money Cost of Laxity in Navy Building

The average citizen will do well to hesitate before opposing his judgment to that of the Secretary of the Navy and the Navy's general board who ask seven hundred and twenty-five million dollars for new warship construction over a period of five years.

The Secretary of the Navy and the General Board are responsible for the safety of the country. Their proposal is approved by the President and the budget director, whose approval is a very strong indication that the expenditure cannot be safely omitted in the interests of economy.

If the sum seems large, it is proper to remember that it is large because we, alone among nations, have ceased navy building for the last seven years. We ceased in the vain hope that other nations would follow our example. The President and his administration now announce that it is unsafe for us longer to cultivate defensive weakness while other nations cultivate offensive strength.

Today we have one hundred and fifty six thousands tons of this type of vessel, built or building. The administration proposes building twenty-five more cruisers with a total tonnage of two hundred and fifty thousand. Adding these to our present equipment, we shall still have only two-thirds of the total that Great Britain says is necessary for her safety.

Is not our trade as deserving of protection as Great Britain's?

In 1926, the latest figures, our exports were greater than hers and our total volume of trade almost exactly the same. Our national wealth, exceeding that of the entire British Empire, requires at least as adequate a defense. What honest man, either here or in any other country can accuse us of competitive armament if we provide our navy with two-thirds of the British cruiser strength?

In some circles, particularly those adopting the motto "My Country, Always Wrong," it is old-fashioned and taboo to talk about the flag. It is not old-fashioned among those who know that this nation grew great under a government which showed it had the power to guard what is ours and to protect our citizens in their lawful business throughout the world.

Secretary Wilbur says, "Future wars must be fought largely by vessels already completed at the beginning of the war."

Josiah Quincy, Congressman from Massachusetts, arose in Congress during the War of 1812, when America's weakness in seapower was being tragically demonstrated, and said:

"The term flag is talked about as though there was something mystical in its very nature—as though a rag with certain stars and stripes upon it tied to a stick were a wizard wand and entailed security on everything under it or within its sphere.

"There is nothing like all this in the nature of the thing. A flag is the evidence of power. A land flag is the evidence of land power. A maritime flag is the evidence of sea power.

"You may have a piece of bunting upon a staff, and call it a flag, but if you have no maritime power to maintain it, you have a name and no reality. You have the shadow without the substance. You have the sign of a flag, but in truth you have no flag."

We believe that the flag means something to Congress today—the flag and the ability to maintain American independence and American rights against unjust aggression from any nation, no matter how powerful.

Juries and Opinion

The Cincinnati Bar Association has called a meeting to consider the evils in the jury system revealed in the Remus verdict.

It will be interesting to have from so distinguished a body a clear statement of just what those evils are.

The Remus verdict did not seem from a distance to be very closely in accord with the facts brought out during the dramatic bootlegger's trial.

But it bore no suggestion of corrupt influence. It was rather a sign that in Hamilton county, Ohio, at least, the community did not take a particularly unsympathetic view of bootlegging or of a passional crime by a bootlegger.

If that be the fact, and if it also be an evil, the evil is chargeable to the fact that the jury reflects the sentiment of the community.

Mellon's Prudent Advice

In view of the fact that of each two dollars that Uncle Sam needs one comes from the income tax, Secretary Mellon's suggestion that we wait until March 15 for more light on incomes before finishing the new tax cut sounds sensible.

A surplus is always easier to handle than a deficit.

Moods of Men

By DR. FRANK CRANE

ONE of John Wesley's rules was: "We should trample under foot that enthusiastic doctrine that we are not to do good unless our hearts are free to it."

And John Wesley was a shrewd and wise man.

We are all of us obsessed with the idea that good work is only done when the spirit moves.

Female authors are supposed to get up in the middle of the night when they have a bright idea and jot it down, as they would get up if a flea bit them or they had a pain.

All authors are supposed to do their best work when they feel like it.

We have visions of Byron working with a gin bottle on one side and a beautiful maiden on the other, dashing off an inspiring poem.

As a matter of fact it will not do to depend upon moods.

The best thing is regular hours and steady work. For you can train moods as anything else and if you work at a certain time every day the mood is liable to come.

Of course, there are times when you do better work than others. We all have hours of inspiration. But these times come to the worker. A man who depends upon his moods never accomplishes much.

If you go to work anyhow the mood will come generally.

The ditch digger starts in with a sore back and aching joints, but after he digs awhile he gets his second wind and pretty soon he is working hard.

The writer must stick to his job and write regularly, just as the omnibus driver must do. If he doesn't he will not get much accomplished.

People seem to forget that writing is a business like anything else and a man who attends to his business will get farther along than a man who waits for the divine afflatus.

There are times when the preacher preaches better than others and the singer sings better than others, but they have to go right along preaching and singing just the same whether they feel like it or not.

Garrett P. Serviss Says:

Self-Education

THE school only gives you a start; and it can't do that without your help, your co-operation. The great education is self-education. This goes on throughout life, or should. Of course, your business, whatever it is, educates you in things that pertain to it. But that kind of education alone makes a one-sided man, who doesn't shine in society, lacks contacts with his fellow men, and does them little good.

In my early years I once lived in a boarding house, and some of us used to go on Sunday mornings to hear Henry Ward Beecher preach. Then, at dinner we would often discuss some point in the sermon, for Beecher was no droning sermonizer, but a great stirrer-up of thought. We got a good deal of self-education out of those talks. But there was one man at our table who was a drummer for a big New York commercial house, and he, though a boastful talker, never joined in our discussion.

"I don't know anything about it," he would say, if asked for his opinion. "I only know how to sell silk goods. That is all I study."

Let those who will, imprison their minds in that way. It is widely supposed by employers to be a great virtue. No doubt it gives its rewards, and many are content with rewards of that nature. But in the fields of life they are like blades of grass indistinguishably mown by the reaper. They pass, having never known the joy of growing to a greater mental stature.

For self-education something more than books is needed. Yet every house should contain at least fifty—better a hundred—books, exclusive of novels. Books of history, science, biography, philosophy, art, travel. It should also contain such machinery of education as globes, terrestrial and celestial; a microscope, a small telescope, if only a pocket one; magnets, magnifying glasses, barometers; some of the simpler apparatus of chemistry, in connection with photographic appliances, etc. I am not making a complete list.

"What!" says somebody. "Are we not filling our secondary schools with these things, and cannot they be sufficiently studied there?"

No, they are not and cannot be, sufficiently studied there. These are things that the swift march of modern knowledge makes indispensable to anyone not content to fall far in the rear. A horseshoe magnet in the house is better than many of the ornaments that load the shelves, tables and mantels. It has in it a marvelous power that may awaken young minds to a consciousness of their own sleeping powers. An electrified glass or gutta percha rod is a plaything that can put a schoolboy ahead of his lessons.

One who has not tried it can have no conception of the illumination that comes from the habitual use of a globe in connection with geographical subjects. Maps should only be consulted for details. When dealing with wide areas of the earth they distort or conceal the facts. The lack of popular use of globes instead of maps is partly responsible for the lurking doubt which still lingers in the minds of some persons about the globular shape of the earth and for the difficulty which many experience in understanding how people can live on the other side of the earth with their feet pointed toward us.

Longer Life—Fuller?

IT IS encouraging to learn that each baby born in 1928 will face a probability of life 10 years longer than that of his father and 20 years longer than that of his grandfather—though many grandfathers reached a ripe old age.

We are beating disease and deferring the undertaker. But are we really getting so much more out of life?

Once Overs

By J. J. MUNDY

Forgive and Forget

IT IS hard for you to apologize, even when you are wrong.

Have you had a misunderstanding, a vigorous quarrel?

You know you were at fault, but you won't say so.

Childish pride keeps you from saying what you now have come to see—that you were wrong.

And what are you getting out of it all?

It may be a quarrel with some friend, with whom you would like again to be closely associated.

It may be some member of your own family, but whoever it is, you won't give in, and so you punish yourself with your obstinacy.

If you were wrong and the other person right you are punishing yourself more than he or she is punished.

And life is too short to harbor ill-feeling.

Life is too short to harbor mean and disagreeable thoughts concerning anyone, whether those thoughts are right or wrong.

Be the first one to make an effort toward reconciliation.

At least begin to think kind thoughts and time may take care of the matter till you are put in position to straighten things out.

Distant Music

DISTANT music, faintly falling,
Through the noises of the street,
To my ears your voice comes calling,
Vague, insistent, very sweet!

All about are din and clamor
Ringing through the city's ways,
With the strange allure and glamor
That men dread while yet they praise.

Falling, rising, ebbing, flowing
Silver notes are borne along:
As the vagrant wind comes blowing,
Some streets grow glad with song.

So through tumult never-ending,
So through restlessness and strife
Ever comes love's music, lending,
Of its grace and charm to life.

AND THE other day.
IN FULL UNIFORM.
HE CALLED on me.
* * *
TO GET A book.
* * *
I HAD promised him.
* * *
AND I could see.
* * *
AS I opened the door.
* * *
TO LET him in.
THAT THE little boys.
* * *
AND THE little girls.
ALL OUT to play.
WERE SCAMPERING here.
AND SCAMPERING there.
TO SPREAD the news.
* * *
THERE WAS a policeman.
* * *
GONE IN our house.
AND TWO of the boys.
WHO HAD rolled a boulder.
DOWN THE hill.
TO ALMOST the door.
* * *
OF OUR garage.
AND WHOM I had warned.
MUST ROLL it back.
THEY BEAT it away.
* * *
AS FAST as they could.
AND WHILE THE policeman.
SAT WITH me.
IN THE LITTLE room.
WHERE MY typewriter is.
SOME OF THE kids.
CLIMBED up the hill.
AND HID themselves.
BEHIND THE brush.
AND GAZED at us.
THROUGH THE window panes.
OF THE little room.
IN WHICH we sat.
AND LOOKED at books.
AND TALKED of them.
AND ANYWAY.
IN A LITTLE while.
AND I went with him.
AS FAR AS the steps.
AND WHEN HE had gone.
THE KIDS came down.
FROM OFF the hill.
AND AROUND THE corners.
AND FROM everywhere.
AND STOOD in groups.
AND LOOKED at me.
AND I went in.
AND IT'S two days now.
SINCE ALL the excitement.
* * *
AND THE rock has been rolled.
FROM WHERE IT was.
NEAR OUR garage.
BUT THEN again.
* * *
ON THE OTHER hand.
I UNDERSTAND.
* * *
THERE IS a report.
* * *
I STOLE a book.
* * *
AND THE policeman came.
AND TOOK it away.
* * *
I THANK you.

THOUGHTS OF THE GREAT—

The wisdom of the wise and the experience of the ages may be preserved by the quotation.—Isaac Disraeli.

First, religious and moral principles; secondly, gentlemanly conduct; thirdly, intellectual ability. —Thomas Arnold.

New York Day by Day

by O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—This new age camraderie existing between New York parents and their children is a little mystifying to those of another generation accustomed to parental aloofness. Most of us stood in filial awe—and were almost dumb in presence of parents.

But time has mellowed this icy relationship. In other days if father or mother entered a room filled with youngsters, gaiety vanished and youth became formal. Elders were tolerated but not wanted. Only something portentous was confided to them.

Today fathers and sons meet at their clubs, shake-up something hidden in the locker, indulge a few cigarets and perhaps sit in the front row of the latest hosty-totsy show together. Among the rich there is even a custom of sons calling fathers by first names.

In a like fashion mothers accompany daughters to tea, meet the boy friends, dance, smoke and sometimes flirt a little. Years no longer create a chasm. If young people want to hold hands or go in for other varieties of petting, they do not sneak off to a darkened alcove.

This morning at breakfast in a hotel dining room, a crisp gentleman who rustled his paper in annoyance while waiting some one was finally joined by a rather downcast sprig. "You look rather seedy this morning, son," observed the elder.

"No wonder, Dad," was the reply. "I was plastered last night and didn't get in until daylight." There was a silence and then: "Your mother doesn't know?" Being assured she did not, the two conspirators went on talking pleasantly of other matters.

In my day, there would have been a grave family conference, a trip behind the barn, and breakfast off the mantel for a few days. It all means youth has acquired an independence never before dreamed. It may be an excellent thing, but I don't know. It's too deep for me.

If a New York taxi driver with a passenger in his cab is caught by the police with the "Vacant" sign showing he is handed a ticket for gypping the company. If driving his own cab, he is given a ticket just the same, presumably on the theory he is robbing himself.

* * *

Now that the taxi driver's picture is in every cab he somehow or other becomes of greater personal interest. One today explained his photograph did him little justice. "I had been shooting craps all night before that was taken," he explained. And added: "And never made a pass."

* * *

The same driver volunteered another interesting saga to taxicab lore. He said tips were bigger on Saturday, it being his reasonable deduction people had just received their weekly salaries and were more inclined to generosity. He liked to pick up young fellows with their girls, explaining they give big tips to show off.

Edging into a crowd clotted around a policeman today, I inquired: "What's the matter, officer?" He replied sharply: "What do you represent?"—and I couldn't think of a thing. Seeing my hesitation, he added: "Just nibby, eh?" But isn't it killing, the cutting things you can think up to say to a policeman after you have walked five blocks away?

I wonder why detectives acquire an unmistakable "look." And their manner is almost invariably glum. Is it because they read about themselves in books and ape the mannerisms novelists attribute to them?

* * *

My idea of a thorough cosmopolite is one who has learned to call a depot a station. Just when I got the knack of calling it "day-po"—that went out.

Tales That Are Told

Protecting Her Husband

DOWNSTAIRS a board creaked a foot scraped over a chair, and there was the tinkle of silver! Mrs. Bingham suddenly sat up in bed and pulled vigorously at her sleeping husband's arm.

"Whassa matt—" he began.

"'Shh!" she whispered. "There's a burglar downstairs—get a light and go down at once."

Mr. Bingham trembled and the hair rose on his head, but he was a quick thinker.

"Right," he said, "I'll go straight down. It's probably the girl-burglar who has been robbing houses about here—a sweet-looking little thing who always kisses her way out of trouble when she gets caught. I'll go down."

His wife seized him by the arm and pulled him back into bed, exclaiming:

"John, your place is with me! You stay here!"

Uncomplimentary

THE geography lesson was almost over, and the teacher decided it was about time she asked a few questions.

"What are the leaders of different Red Indian tribes called?" was her first query.

"Chiefs," answered a small boy.

"Correct," smiled the teacher. "Now can anybody tell me what the wives of these men are called?"

For a minute or two there was complete silence. Every pupil in the class was thinking hard. Finally, the same small boy stepped into the breach.

"Miss Chiefs," he cried proudly.
